IDEALS NATIONAL "Praise the Power that bath made and preserved us a nation, Then prosper we must, for our cause it is just,"

HE nation is nothing more nor less than a group of individuals. The deeds of a nation are the deeds of its people. The progress of a nation is the combined initiative, courage, and achievement of its subjects. The moral prestige of a nation is the slative result of the aspirations, the thoughts, the ideals of the people who nprise it. The glosy that was Rome's was but a reflection of the minds of illust Roman Statesmen and Philosophers. The fall of Rome was the inevitable result of the moral nce of the individual Romans. Carthage, Assyria, Greece . . . the great nations of old who, in their turn, dominated their world . . . have outlived their glories for no other reason than that he ideals of the populace, individually, became unworthy of a great people. § Napoleon, that slave of ambition, whose triumphs ended in inevitable disaster, created a glorious Empi ed mightily for a space, and then was dissipated to the four winds of Heaven . . . nourahed migraty for a space, and tean was dissipated to the four winds of Henen... Because, behind the creation of this mighty power these was no thought but world-dominane, no inspiration but the last for power, no ideal but vanity and ambition. 7 As with these gene nation, to with others of yearerday and today. Faded glories, national extinction, disruption, discretist, and on. These are the aftermaths, the inevitable consequences of the loss or the de the measure of the nation's power. Let a people be imbued with high and worthy ideals, let them place honour before honours, let them strenuously adhere to the high standard of their nost worthy aspirations, retain their self respect, maintain their moral and ethical principles that the Crown of Great Britain stands for, Her Most Gracious Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, is the revered and beloved leader of a Mighty Empire. 5 Here in this Southern outpost, we are bound to the motherland by no display of force, by no arrogant show of Imperial do The link which binds us to the tiny island in the North Sea is intangible yet all powerful, the bond of a common ideal, of loyalty, of honour, and of pride . . for we glost jet all possession of national ideals, which no for, from within or without, could real themselves.
