

The first portion of this my Diary is of retrospective nature showing prior arrivals of Colonists whom, in after life, became related to me by marriage.

(Signed) F.J. Tiffen.

1839 - Oct. 1st. The Barque Duke of Roxburgh, 417 tons, left London Docks for Wellington N.Z. arriving at her destination on Feby. 8th of following year. Amongst the passengers (of whom there were about) were George Hunter son, and wife, 4 sons, and 7 daughters. George (mar. Margaret Paul, Wellington) David (mar. M.A. Monteith, my sister-in-law, 18) William (mar. Anne Guthrie) Robert (mar. Helen Paul (His sister-in-law 18) Barbara) Jessie (mar. Rev. Cole) Margaret (mar. Rev. Covette) Helent) Bel (Isabell?) Fanny (mar. Bethune) and Tiney (Mar Capt. Buck) A cow of Hunter's aboard served as foster mother to baby Lucy E. Monteith. In addition to the Hunter family there was Dr. G.D. Monteith, his wife, and family of 2 sons, George Dalrymple and Jack, and three daughters, Elizabeth, Maria, and Lucy Eleanor the youngest, being six weeks' baby on embarkation who in year 1849 married F.J.T. Sons died instead of marrying. Subsequently Elizabeth mar. Alfred Chapman of Edenham. Maria mar George Neill, H.M. Command Dept. Katharine mar. Wm. Augustus Warren, and Mary Ann Mar. David Hunter of Porongahau.

1842. The barque Brougham which left England in Sep. or October 1841 arrived in Wellington with a goodly staff of Land Surveyors under engagement with the N.Z. Company, amongst them being Henry Stokes Tiffen (my brother) and his young wife (daughter of Captain White R.N. Hastings, Kent) who died Oct. 1842 aged 17 in Wellington.

1843 - June Wairua Massacre.

1845 - Jan. ? Prior to expiry of the three year's engagement with the N.Z. Coy. Mr. James Henry Northwood, wife and daughter Elizabeth (Mrs. A. Knowles 18) arrived in Wellington and a 7 years' partnership was entered into as Sheep Farmers. H.S.T. later on proceeding to the Wairarapa and acquiring a track of land known as Te Ahieruhi from the Native Owners at a rental of £12 a year. The area was about 8,000 acres. Maoris built the first dwellinghouse of 3 rooms Totara bark sides, and divisions and Manuka bark roof.

A patch of ground cleared by Natives and 1 white man (Bennet) and a crop of wheat put in. H.S.T. was here on my arrival in Wellington.

1845. In March (10) I left the St. Catherine Docks in the good ship Louisa Campbell, Capt. Darby, and on 16th, my birthday age 16, set sail for New Zealand (4 months voyage) arriving in Nelson 122 days out on June 10, left 21st, and Wellington on 24th. Whilst there heard of the wreck of the Tyne (which left London a little before the L.C.) at Tarawiti ? near Wellington.

Amongst my fellow-passengers were Thompson, a lad of about same age, Murray and his friend Reynolds (both Tipplers) Hill, Charlton (Auckland) a Lankey man; Bushell an old Channel Capt. getting out of the way, Dr.. and his wife, Rich and his now second wife (Auckland) Good, Captain Good of later Colonial Army renown (Taranaki) Miss Taylor (who formed a Millinery shop Te Aro, Wellington) and 3 or 4 other passengers whose names I have forgotten. Called at St. Jago, Cape Verki Isle.

At Nelson, between the landing place and town, were a couple of market places, built of brick, for Maories; these I did not care to pass alone at first, as the Maories seemed to demonstrative and noisy - apparently angry.

1845. Captain Cross was the Pilot and it appeared very close shaving coming into port, the Fifeshire (formerly Whithy) Rock standing in the way, Mud flats seemed to thrive and mussels too, the sailors got a good lot.

The L.C. remained 11 days here and arrived in Wellington on 24th June, 1845. About 6 weeks later a cargo of Merino Ewes arrived in Wellington from Newcastle N.S.W. to the order of Northwood and Tiffen, which after being landed a few days were on Aug. 19th driven through the main street of Wellington Lambton Quay, en route Wairarapa via coast route - the only one then. The flock numbered between 700 and 800 and 1 peck mare and two small pigs. Engaged in the expedition were the partners N. and T. myself, York, Faddock, Mr. C.J. Phararyn sen. now 99 years of age, G. Swainson and D. Henderson. At Waimuomata a half dozen head of cattle of H.S.Y. were added to the live stock, having been sent by W. Bertram White (H.S.T.'s brother-in-law who was settled near).

Memo

The Ahiruhi (Ahi Fire aruhi fern roots) run contained about 8,000 acres, the hills being covered with stunted fern and the terraces and flats with native grasses and a good sprinkling of Te tree scrub. It was the farthest run up the valley that was taken up, and remained so for a year or two, when "Manai" run (W.H. Donald or Rhodes and Donald) was settled by Donald, wife and family, and later on Te Oriori run by R. Collins who removed from Bedwells with his sheep.

Northwood and Tiffen after a while purchased a mob of heifers and turned them on to the run but nobody ever mustered them or went among them and they became wild, their presence being know only by their crashing amongst the scrub in the gullies. We never had any more cattle beyond a few milkers.

1845 - Sept. After 17 days journeying we reached Ahiruhi with 758 Ewes 6 head of cattle and a mare.

The route around the coast from Wellington to Wairarapa Lake afforded obstacles which the earthquakes of 1848 removed through a general upheaval of the land in that neighbourhood. Rocky points which could be got round only at low water and with smooth or moderate sea became passable at all tides even at the Muka Muka rocks where it used to be a ticklish job to negotiate at all times. Maories ferried the sheep across the lake (it being open at the time) but the sheep were pretty tame from their sea voyage and coast journey and easily caught and tied and placed in canoes. The only incident that occurred in the Valley was the bogging on Wharekaka Plain of the mare and smothering the two (pigs) Porkers which formed part of her load. Swainson and myself were in this, but H.S.T. was supposed to be directing us to a firmer crossing but did not look back to see if we were following until it was too late.

Memo

To negotiate the Muka Muka Rocks half the sheep were left behind at last Camp, and we were at the obstacles with the other half before daylight piled up stones at one point so that the sheep might scale the point and at another point it had been tunnelled and was known as "Cole Hole" named after Rev. Coles who used to visit the country occasionally. Rider had to go into the sea a bit to get around these points but even then the tide had to be well out. If a swell was on nobody attempted to pass. This is as the Muka Muka was, it became safe travelling after the earthquake even at high tide. It was a great relief getting quit of the coast, but it was not all coast, as a long stretch of hills, known as Rhodes Hills had to be travelled between Okiva (Brown Acorn House) and Wainui - o - Mata Orongorongo (Riddlefords).

We had but one sheep-dog "Bob" imported from Australia with the sheep, fortunately the Merinoes were low or Bob would have been of but little use.

After leaving the Pa at the Lake called Kai-ko-kiri-kiri in the neighbourhood of which was the first Station owned by, or rather rented from, the Maories by Drummond and Wallace - a cattle station, and it was stated that one of the partners not knowing mules did not breed, grazed a number on account of an Australian, on thirds, that is to say, his recompense was to be 1/3rd of the progeny - which came not.

A trifle further up the valley the "Sow & Spuds" accommodation house kept by J. Grindall was reached and welcomed too as the first European quarters though primitive.

Tauanui Station came next rented by Charlton Serogge Tully. Two, if not three, being of the N.Z. Coy. Survey Staff. To the right of Tauanui, and on the coast was Wangai-Moana Sheep Station, Purvie Russells and one of his brothers with him.

There was no other coast Station near Te Kopi, the landing place, until Mr. C. Phararyn Sen. (who helped us up with the sheep) took up Waterangi run (just beyond Te Kopi) at this visit to Wairarapa. From Tauanui we passed Tuterata (McMasters) Otaria (Gillies, wife and family).

Memo.

Packing Station requisites and household requirements from Te Kopi, their landing place, to Ahiauhi, about 40 miles, also Wool as return load - occupied much of my time, in conjunction with one David Henderson. The journey occupied 5 days, nearly all on foot, and when the packages were not equally balanced on the pack animal a few stones had to be requisitioned. My chief animal was the bull, but mule horse and donkey were also used. The bull had a ring in his nose but was not comfortable riding perched on a pack saddle and but one rein to guide him. Sometimes our neighbours and us would go for stores Etc. at same time and thus about 6 loads were brought home. Packing wool to Te Kopi, about two tons first shearing, was an awkward job on account of its bulk, and on arrival repacking into larger bags or bales for shipment to Wellington. A pair of harrows once formed a pack made snug with a few score yards of calico. The mule got bogged in a creek and we had to unload the animal before it would rise. There was not a bridge or half a mile of formed road to travel over at this time nor several years later, nor was there an acre of freehold land in the hands of Europeans.

Wharekaka (Clifford & Wold) Kupungarara (since Pihautea) Bridwell and his friend Collins, the latter afterwards taking up Te Oriori near the top on the valley a few years later on, next to Wharekaka, a large plain extending to the Huangarua river, on the other side of which was the run known as Huangarua occupied by Capt. Wm. Smith and wife and family, and Seal. Nevans. On their boundary was the Ahiauhi Run on the west side of which ran the river Ruamahanga, on the other side of which Morrison and family occupied a cattle run. These runs constituted the Col. 1845, when every acre of land, with small exceptions, from the Hutt near Wellington to Auckland was owned by Natives, and it is surprising on looking back, to the fact that the Maories rigidly respected the primitive leases made between them and their white tenants. Rent was invariably paid in coin, but it immediately came back in payment for clothing, prints, calico, Etc.

Memo.

The Ewes imported from N.S.W. were timed to lamb in Sep. and this is the way that event conducted. Paddock, the shepherd of English origin, had me as his assistant, and my picture I formed of reclining on a bank and watching the gambols of the lambs was dispelled on the first day, for as soon as the flock was got well together I had to keep going round and backwards and forwards all day to keep them within bounds. Even to late in the evening when we used to leave them camping would we remain there and to home for a bulls eye lantern. Every morning it took two or three hours to collect the ewes again, give some lambs a drink of milk and keep them in close compass as the previous day and to the end of the lambing. When the lambing ground, from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 mile off had to be changed an extra hand helped us two to drive Ewes and Lambs right off to that ground, such a job to get the young lambs to move in the right direction, such confusion such folly. No wonder the percentage was low at docking.

Memo continued:-

Shearing followed, the operation being performed by an old Jim Coutes and his co-shearer Charlie Cameron. Each fleece was rolled up and tied with a strip of flax-leaf, locks and pieces loose. The woolpack, known as $\frac{3}{4}$ bale was suspended to the roof by its 4 corners and into that was packed, by treading in, enough fleeces to make about a hundred pound bale for packing to the coast, about 30 miles, where they were repacked for shipment by boat to Wellington. Scab existed in the flock either the first or the second year. Our neighbouring run (Smith & Bevan's) had scabby sheep and there being no fencing on the stations beyond a few hundred acres the flocks ranged sometimes beyond their own limits, thus one day I detected a rough woolled intruder amongst those under my care, caught him and drove him in flax harness to the station a distance of about two miles. It was there dressed with something or other, tethered in the garden, but next day it was non est, and as the masters didn't mind they evidently knew more about its disappearance than they cared to tell me, or even Smith & Bevan's. It was a very scabby animal but none of us knew much about that scourge, except theoretically.

1845. Sept. 6. After 19 days journey from Wellington, arrived at Ahiaruhi with 758 Merino Ewes, 1 mare, and six head of cattle. This ended 3 folios back.

1846. January, 10th. My first visit to Wellington since leaving with the sheep on Aug. 19 of last year. Journeyed on foot taking four days, being on pleasure bent - to see the races, which were then on Te Aro Flat on January of each year - being anniversary of foundation of Wellington in year 18.

Northwood and Tiffen leased another run from the Native owners in this year. Bounded on the South by bush and swamp on East by Ruamahangi River on North by Waingau a river and on West to bush at the foot of the mountains. A 10,000 acre property I should say. Leaving Ahiaruhi the Ruamahanga river was forded, thence through a mile or two of bush and over the big hill Paranui-o-Kuaka to a flat called Tananui which extended to the Pa Hurunui-orangi and to the Waingana river. At the foot of Paranui - o - Kuaka, on this flat was our Tananui outstation, occupied by a shepherd J. Murray and his Maori wife, a hand, and sometimes myself. Here I got my right shoulder dislocated by the Maori woman. I threw a little clay at her whilst assisting Murray to build a chimney. She took off her waist sash, held the ends in each hand, threw it over me and drew both hands smartly to her thus tripping me up backwards. A small junk of timber lying on the ground struck my fore arm and shot it out of the socket. It was quite an accident. Next day went to Ahiaruhi and all the treatment I got was the application of opodeldook solution to reduce the swelling. Nobody knew what was wrong. Twenty days later found me in Wellington (via coast on foot) under treatment of Dr. Dorset reducing the dislocation by a series of long and strong pulls and put me in stays in which I returned to Ahiaruhi.

Memo -

Prior to the third shearing the Whaleboat bring station stores from Wellington and taking back wool made the Lake instead of Te Kopi, dragged the boat across the bar and into the lake, from thence pulled up the Ruamahangi River to Wharekaka Station (Clifford & Weld) so Mr. C. Nairn set to work and made a wool dray, the wheels of which were out from a large Kahikatea or white-pine tree, and with that primitive dray and a good team of bullocks much was done during the summer months. Some of the bullocks had been used packing wool before this dray came into existence, but they gave lots of trouble and did not appreciate a bale on each side of them and perhaps half a bale on top. Old Billy the pack bull was a good beast but the bullocks back. Civilisation tended to kill Billy, chairs were voted better than blocks or stools to sit upon. A case was sent from Wellington but it was so heavy that a corresponding weight had to be made up to balance it, and the animal strained himself and died.

In 1847 - 8 I was a good deal on outstation work under canvas on Taratai flats and on bank of river Waunganui with flock of sheep. Gordon and myself were camped by the Ahi Kihari bush on margin of the Tarathi flat. The bush was celebrated for rats and took its name from these rodents (Kiari). They used to run up and over our tent, across our legs and up to our ears. They scampered about the dry leaves, devoured bacon or salt meat sunk in the stream over night, and just as I was about dozing off Gordon would give me a nudge and say "Hear that". We caught by ordinary gin trap over 100 and left their tails pinned to one of the pine trees. Wild dogs or strayed dogs gave a good deal of trouble at night and we used to mount the ridge overlooking the flats and make a great noise and let off a small brass cannon I had, until one night it burst. The Taratai plains and to river Waunganui was strewn with small plants of amice and so greedy were the sheep for it that it became quite a task to keep the sheep within bounds until all within reach disappeared, and being annual it never afterwards appeared. On these plains grew much Papai or Bayonet grass, being a cluster of 50 to 100 strong and prickly Bayonets covering about a 2 to 4ft square. Patches of a thorny plant named also was numerous. Maories describe this plant as forming the Crown of Thorns of Scripture.

1848 Jan 20. Self and Chas. Nairn left Te Ahiahuhi at daylight reached Blue Rock camp Jan. 21 - Arrived in Wellington via Rimutaka mountains on foot. From Morrisons Run the track ran through Morrisons bush which most of the year was little better than a bog of mud and tree roots. Thence across the trackless Tauherenikau plain of more stones than soil to Burlings accommodation house. Thence across the bush hills where the Government were making a road, thence past Hodders Collins, Mangaroo Bucks (Taitai) Burchums (Hutt) Bush having been either recently or years back all the way from the foot of the hills on Wairarapa side. Charles Nairn accompanied me from Ahiahuhi (started when frost was on the ground) to Swainsons party near Blue Rock where we stopped the night. Thence climbed the hill and descended to Frank Nairns party at Mangaroo roadmen, thence walked into Wellington. Taking the Railway Time Table as guide to the -- distance, say fro half way up the Incline it would be about 40 miles. Walking after sheep month after month seasoned me affectually.

Memo

On one occasion in 97 I was required to go to Waterangi Station (Phararyns) for a servant girl who had been sent from Wellington for Ahiahuhi. Riding down and walking back. At Tanarui I met David Henderson on his way to the station with a hive of Bees from the Hutt. He agreed to await where he was until my return next day. Had an early start with my charge from Phararyns, so as to suit low tide at the cliffs and in good time Henderson and his bees, and me and the young woman (afterwards Mrs. Murray, our shepherd who preferred white bread to brown) made the best progress we could towards home. We travelled all night and were glad of a breakfast at our destination. This is about a 40 mile walk of mine, and the first of that length made. My second being as described under Jan 21/48.

Oct. 16 to 19. Four days of Earthquakes not such as people make a song about now-a-days but real chimney levelling, earth-cracking, terror inspiring articles. A disastrous one at 1 : 40 am. on 16th smaller and numerous for the next 2 days, and a very big shake at 5 a.m. on the 19th. Brick chimneys in the country were scarce articles and our houses could stand a good shaking but in Wellington there was a general pic-nicing and out door cooking going on for want of chimneys. Only one baker's oven was left intact and the owner held the military contract to supply the troops. A brick wall fell and killed Sergt. Lovell and 2 children. Medical Hall kept by Dr. Dorset became a scene to be imagined with bare shelves and contents broken and badly mixed. A number of land slips occurred on the wooded hills between Wellington and Wairarapa and in one instance a house was shaken off the piles supporting it.

Memo

To Mr. J.H. Northwood is attached the credit of securing, by leasing from the Maories, the first run in Hawkes Bay. He was ably assisted by Mr. Charles Nairn, who was a good linguist whilst Mr. N. was a failure in that respect. Pourere and the inland run Omakari were leased - fully 50,000 acres for less than £100 a year. Nothing but Merinoes would have thriven on Pourere for the hills seemed nothing but fern-clad from summit to base, but at Omakari there were good flats and moderate hills. The sheep improved on their journey and our losses were a mere nothing with all the country to roam over without fear of mixing. Scab there was in a small degree but its worst stage was to be later on. In fact it existed during seven years and was eradicated eventually by Chas. Nairn on behalf of Mr. Northwood and myself on H.S. Ts behalf after dissolution of partnership of N. and T.

On one occasion H.S.T. had paid a visit to Wellington (1846 or 1847) and came back full of the lime cure for scab. I set to work and burned lime stone (packed from the base of Rangitoto hill) and dipped them all - to no effect. Arsenic dip was then tried which knocked p up the employees but did not cure the scab. In fact no soda was used in the brewing of the dip.

Jan. 2. Left Ahiaruhi run for the East Coast run Pourere with about 3,000 Merino sheep and a packhorse. There was Mr. Northwood and myself, E. Davis, Dutch Charlie, and another white and six Maories who had come down from the Ahuriri District to help us up. (Arr Pourere 30) We followed down the river Pahau, with its numerous crossings, to the coast to Camerons Run and up the coast camping, (a fortnight after leaving Ahiaruhi), on a flat about 2 miles south of Castle point, and on 30th January - 4 weeks journey - reached Pourere

Not a run to the south of us nearer than Castle Point (Guthries and family) and none nearer than Auckland district to the north.

Feb 2 3 Self and Edward Davis (obit at Pukutapu) removed about 2,000 sheey from Pourere to Omakari leaving about 1,000 under Edward Collins the appointed Manager for N & T A Maori built house served as a homestead.

July 11th. End of 19 days wet weather.

Memo

Wild dogs gave a lot of annoyance and loss at Omakari 21 visits in 10 months, therefore Davis and I erected a hut each, his of toi and cutting grass at one end of the run and, being nearer bush, I erected mine of totara back. From these huts we had the sheep handy to us whilst the feed lasted and then we built a third hut using the first residence as a depot for grinding wheat and for sheep-work in the only yards on the run. We were sometime 8 or 10 days without seeing a living being, when at the huts we had a visit from Maories whilst at the depot.

Wanting stores (reduced to porri porri or Manuka for Tea) also arsenic for sheep dressing, and expecting to find a station hand on board, we put off and boarded the Gipsy. The wind rose to a gale, and the vessel dragged her anchor and had to make sail, having our boat in tow intending to land at a hill sheltered spot further up the coast but before the haven was reached our boat broke adrift leaving us no alternative but to go on to port Ahuriri which we did. The only house was on the Western spit. A store and trading Station, it was where quantities of pigs from all parts were slaughtered or made into Bacon by Messrs. Alexander and Ankertell.

1849 July 20th ?

My first and involuntary visit to Port Ahuriri, in Schooner Gipsy, a Westerly gale having sprung up on boarding the schooner in Station whaleboat only myself E. Collins and dutch Charlietaking the boat out and lost it (see Memo on left)

We three left next morning for Pourere on foot. Called at Waitangi upon Rev. W. Colensoe, thence across Tuki Tuki river and along the beach to Kidnapper cliffs ascended the track there and across the hills to the Southern part of the cape to Waimarema, over more hills to Te Apiti and along coast hills to Pourere. I carried a small bag of arsenic with me as my portion of the requirements about 20lbs I should say, and it gave me a nice sore neck chafing the skin and rubbing in the fine powder which percolated the calico bag.

At Tui-gna-ra (saw the sails) there was a branch trading station of Alexander and Ankertells, kept by one Jack McAllister who bought and pickled a rare lot of pigs, an vessel coming once a month to take away the meat and bring fresh stores and shop goods.

It would be as well in future to write the journalistic parts and the Memo's straight on end.

1850. May 20.

Left Omakari on foot (carrying 5 days provisions & blankets) for Wellington in company with Police Sergt. Scott who had been despatched from Wellington with a subpoena for me (also Mrs. Guthrie at Castle Point) to appear at Supreme Court to give evidence on a trial of Murder against Wm. Good Jones and McAusland. A large vessel the General Palmer was condemned as unseaworthy, anchored in Wellington having a young man named Jones as Caretaker. He was subsequently found stuffed into a pork cask, and the supposed Murderer was tracked up the east coast from Wellington, Police Constable Oxenham following him up. He arrived at Pourere where I was. He, Oxenham, got Morena and another Maori to accompany him and soon after daylight I noticed a couple of Maories, being on foot early, about half a mile distant. I had some sheep drafting to do that day so we (self, Davis, Porter a deserter from 65th Reg.) and Good were about extra early. On came Morena and the other Maori, Constable Oxenham keeping out of sight. The former gave me a printed placard headed Kohuru (murder) £100 e hutu (£100 reward) Morena said tera taka (the other side) and whilst I was reading the English version he collared Good, and told the other Maori to "Mau tetahi" (take the other) and he collared the deserter, communicated with Oxenham, and marched them away to Pourere, so with the loss of two hands I don't expect any sheep-drafting was done that day.

Good had been engaged by me 2 or 3 days ago and I had swapped away a serge shirt for a little coat I thought I looked well in. He gave the name of F.W. Anderson and really his company was well appreciated by us. He was an adept at Whistling and believed to be a military deserter from Australia. Jones and McAusland had gone on towards Port Ahuriri as I wanted only one hand. They were taken to Wellington likewise by some means I forget, but they were acquitted of the crime. This gave me a 300 mile walk. Sergt Scott was a good walker and we gave the 2 or 3 Maories who started with us as much as they could do to keep pace with us. They dropped off declaring we were Manu (birds) and we saw no more of them.

Third day from Pourere brought us to Castle Point and in the evening a schooner arrived there from Wellington for Mrs. Guthrie who had been subpoenaed on some business as myself, she having received a pair of shoes or boots from Good whilst mine was the receiving of a coat. Sergt. Scott and Mrs. Guthrie took passage by the schooner but I wanted to call at Ahiaruhi to see the partners N & T so I footed it, two days to Ahiaruhi, stayed a few days and got into Wellington on June 1 in time for the trial. My coat nor the boots which Mrs. Guthrie obtained threw no light on the murder case and in settling with me the Govt. refused to pay mileage from Castle Point as I should have taken passage in the Schooner they had chartered. In that I dare say they were right but I did not think so at the time. Good was executed in Wellington a few days after the trial.

From the time I passed Castle Point on way up with the sheep on 17th Jun (49) to my arrival there with Sergt. Scott (May 24/50) I saw neither white woman or child, nor a dozen white men.

1852 Jan 10.

Left N & T's. service intending to see a little civilised life, having been about 1/2 yrs. in Wairarapa and 3 years Omakari. (This too Premature). Hawkes Bay at this time and years back was great for Whales but Poverty Bay was the favourite spot. All deserters from the 65th and other Regts. in Wellington and all minor criminals used to make for the Bay which got the name of Save-all and it was from the deserter element we got our white labor. At one time we had 3, Porter who was taken at same time as Good was taken, rendered the Policeman such good service on my way to Wellington that he received no punishment. Now about the above mentioned 3 deserters Claridge, Moor & Green.

It was shearing time 1850 I had been shearing and went to bed tired and with a bad turn of tooth-ache, was lying half-dressed when I received a shaking, opening my eyes I saw Collins, the boss, sitting up on his bed and standing by mine was Sergt. Sculley went to Omakari and afterwards made a cut across country to the coast striking it 5 or 6 miles north of Poutere thinking he might intercept any escapees. Claridge the third deserter had taken up his quarters in the wool-shed that night, and escaped capture at the off set, or by Sculley's stratagem. Next morning Collins and myself bribed Morena to let the deserters Moor and Green escape. Corporal Ben, after breakfast, absented himself for a short time giving Morena his pistol. No sooner than the Corporal was clear of the house than off went the captured as free as a bird, whilst Morena followed up behind making a great display with the pistol and his lunge, and it was truly a picture to see the Corporal rushing round the corner of the house in an undressed plight. Morena got a far greater reward for letting them go than had he any chance of getting by retaining his prisoners.

Soon after the bolt I left for Omakari and from the high fern along the track the deserters crept out and we laid our plans in a very few minutes, as we were in fear of meeting Sculley any moment, not knowing he was at that time traversing fern hills miles away.

I reached my hut and slept the sleep of the righteous. In the night - a moonlight one - they came to my hut, opened the door (it was never fastened) and lifted a boot of mine, which was close to the door, which they -- identified as belonging to me through being trod over on one side, they then woke me up and, as arranged, went into the bush close by, where I arranged to feed them for a few days, expecting the arrival of Mr. Northwood from Ahiaruhi when the few shillings owing to them, after deducting the bribe, could be paid. Getting tired of waiting in the bush they -- agreed to take stope and tobacco which serve as currency therewith to pay their way to Saverall.

During a visit made by H.S.T. to Wellington, Dr. Featherstone, Superintendent of the Province, expressed an inclination to see a bridle track opened through the 40 mile bush to Ahuriri, then part of Wellington Province, (which was the general name given to the whole of the country north of the said bush at the time) £100 was the sum arranged upon for an 8 or 10 feet track through the bush.

1952, Jan 10.

Left Northwood & Tiffens service after being with them $3\frac{1}{2}$ years in Wairarapa and 3 years at Omakari. Intended going to Australia to see a little more life than I had hitherto seen in New Zealand. This time I intended going through the 40 mile bush to Wairarapa, having a look en route what sort of a job cutting the track would be.

The first day's walk was Waipukurau Pa where I picked up a Maori guide for part the way, next day made Takapau, on 13th entered the bush nearer the hills than present railway line, and camped under a big tree rain having made its presence unpleasantly felt. On 14th a short journey brought us to the Hautotara Pa where we were glad to halt and get dry.

Jan 15. Left Hautotara Pa with fresh guide, passed Pututahi Pa and slept at Ngawapuru Pa and next day arrived at Ahiaruhi. This days journey being an open country one.

I estimated the extent of bush, by the track I journeyed, to be fully 70 miles. A Report on this route was subsequently asked of me, and here it is. addressed to Mr. Ludhem who was then Member of Provincial Council for the Ahuriri portion of the Wellington Province.

Before giving it however I will remark in addition to its being a heavy task to widen the track as for £100, I found the natives strongly opposed to its being done, they believed it was all the same as taking possession. I believe one European only had traversed this route before me, and one other European had journeyed part of it and struck off to the right via Manawatu Gorege to the west coast. Further than this the route was un trodden except by Maories.

Copy of Report on route Kautariwhi to Wairarapa via 70 mile bush (then known as 40-mile bush.) September, 1853

Alfred Ludham Esq., M.P.C. Hutt.

Sir,

In conformity with your request I have the pleasure of forwarding a description of my route from Ahuriri to Wairarapa. On leaving the Waipukurau Pa the native path leads for about 22 miles through open grass land nearly level and of very fine soil. The footpath diverges slightly from a direct line to avoid some limestone ranges, at the termination of this tract of open land the path enters the forest: at a distance of about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles it emerges on to a plain of about 500 acres, when it re-enters the bush and in about 7 miles opens on to a small plain of about $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile in diam. which, being crossed, the path leads through about 2 miles of forest and again comes into a grass plain which it keeps for about a mile. After proceeding about 5 miles through a bush called "Te Ohu" it leads to Hautotata, a small Pa on the edge of a grass plain (on the banks of the river Manawatu) containing about 150 acres, which passed it goes through a bush of about half a mile, after which it proceeds 7 miles through an open plain (with a small river running through it to Puhitahi Pa from which point the track from Ahieruhi to Manawatu diverges. The path then enters the bush again and after a distance is passed of about a mile it leads into an open space of about 500 acres and re-enters the bush and crosses the river manawatu 9 times. This however might be avoided by a side cutting of about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles and I should judge from the absence of cliffs in that distance not expensive work would be necessary to accomplish it. At the end of about 5 miles the path comes to Ngawapuru Pa on the Manawatu river. After leaving the Pa 13 miles brought me to a small opening of about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile long and rather wider, at end of which is Te Awara Pa. Very soon after leaving this Pa the native track ascends a hill called Ke Tuku-tuku of about moderate elevation and of easy ascent. From Te Awara Pa to the Wairarapa plains I calculated to be about 18 miles of bush towards the end of which the character of the country is undulating.

In conclusion I should mention that with the exception of one swamp, about 100 yard across, the whole distance is sound land, that the bush is of open nature and the different rivers, with the exception of the Manawatu, might easily be bridged.

I am, Sirs,
Yours very truly,
Frederick John Tiffen.

1852 Jan 20. to Feb 11.

I was in Wellington waiting for a vessel to take me to Sydney. On that day I sailed in the brigantine William Alfred, Captain Finley, with a number of passengers, most of whom had caught the gold fever. The passage took 14 days, when I first saw what I considered a great city so far away from home, here I remained idle until April 18 when I joined on probation as trooper of the mounted patrol, took up my quarters in Carters Barracks (near the present Railway Station) and underwent sword and mounted drill until end of April.

May 1. - was sworn in by Captain Mayne and Sergt Darby at Sydney, referred to Captain Batty at Paramatta for locality, and proceeded in mail coach (used also as conveyance of gold and gold escort between Sydney and Bathurst and Turon) to Penrith,

May 2 - Walked from Penrith to Weatherboard P.S. (near Wentworth falls) where I was to receive accoutrements - carbine, sword and brace of pistols and horse. Remained all next day cleaning saddle and accoutrements.

May 4 - Left weather board patrol station well mounted and armed, and, no doubt, felt very important. Reached Hartley P.S. Passing Blackheath Patrol Station en route.

1852 May 5 - Hartley P.S. to Diamond Swamp P.S. and next day arrived at Bathurst Patrol Station, my destination, and reported myself to sergt. McCarth, the officer in charge.

On 24th May (Queen's Birthday) it came to my turn to form one of the escort to proceed to Turon for Gold and return next day to Bathurst with the precious metal for Sydney. On arrival of the mail coach at the Turon the escort received the gold from the Commissioner and took it to the Gold Police Barracks for the night and guarded it. I had from 8 o'clock to midnight on this occasion on guard duty. There was a good fire and the troopers snored whilst I had to keep awake, a loaded pistol on the table and two iron boxes about 18 inches long by 9 x 9 in. for a seat. Besides these 2 boxes there was a small bag of gold about the size of my fist. When in my jacket pocket it became unpleasantly heavy and whilst on the table I was afraid it might be collared, for I felt very sleepy after a long day's ride, military fashion, and a log fire by which I sat. However my relief came at midnight and I was mighty glad. Lots of gun firings shouting and other noises were in evidence until a late hour as the miners were keeping up the anniversary of the Queen's birthday. The Gold Police were mounted men having similar arms and uniform, hip jacket of pilot cloth and trousers of same, strapped with basil but the cap of the G.P. had a gold band round it whereas our head covering was a black cabbage tree. A pair of cloth trousers strapped with same material was worn by us troopers on Sundays and on State occasions.

May 25 - The mail coach with its 5 men of the escort and 2 outriders made escort on the Sydney road until relieved by two of the mounted patrol further on and so on to Sydney.

When we were not required on this weekly escort duty we, in couples controlled the highways leading to and out of Bathurst - but I saw no results from these patrols, nor heard of anything of note transpiring prior to my advent.

1852 June 7 -

My second visit to the Turon Gold Fields. Between these two visits it happened to be my duty to keep awake four hours after midnight so as to arouse a trooper whose duty it was to form 1 of the 2 outriders to the car conveying the gold to Sydney. At the appointed time I left the barrack room and crossed the road to the quarters where the man and his wife resided. Rapped him up and received an "All right" and turned in. Very early a corporal came to my bed ascertained if I had undressed and turned in, or whether I had dropped off. The former was the case and I learned no outrider had accompanied the gold as was the rule, at daybreak. An enquiry was made, and as a fellow trooper heard me passing his cottage, whistling a certain air, I kept my billet and 't' other fellow got a reprimand.

I was about the only grog abstainer amongst the 10 or 12 men, and pay day meant some sort of trouble of other and an occasional discharge. They were a decent lot of young fellows who liked light work or none at all. The flies were a great pest - houses swarmed with them and the shady side of our clothing and horses carried them by thousands, small ants insinuated themselves into sweets in numbers also.

1852 June 16 -

Applied for and obtained my discharge from the Mounted Patrol. Either the occupation or the climate not agreeing with me. There were any number of foggy mornings in the six weeks I had been in Bathurst and I used to get many attacks of cramp. Dr. Bushby furnished the necessary certificate, and I was given a pass by Capt Battey which enabled me to get quarters at the various M.P. Stations en route Sydney.

On June 19 I left Bathurst on foot and at night got quarters at Diamond Swamp Patrol Station, next day reached Bowens Falls (Now Wentworth Falls) on the Blue Mountains.

June 21 - from Bowens Falls to Hartley, thence to Blackheath next day (now). Here I remained 2 days on account of rain and snowfall.

June 25 - Blackheath to Penrith to Sydney intending to return to N.Z. as soon as I could.

1852 July 8 -

Left Sydney for Wellington via Newcastle on the Ship Duke of Roxburgh, Capt. Collard, arriving at Newcastle N.S.W. on following day for cargo of live stock.

This vessel was the fine immigrant vessel that arrived in Wellington in 1849 in which the Hunter and Monteith families arrived. She was now reduced to a Stock-carrying ship, and I applied for and obtained permission from Mr. Sidey, the Charterer, to partially or wholly work my passage. In event of the trip being a successful one I was not to be called upon to pay anything, but, as the sequel will show, it proved the wrong way for me, and I paid a trifle of my trifling balance in hand. It took a fortnight (including filling) to load up with 1,200 sheep, 50 horses and 40 cattle.

July 23 - The Duke of Roxburgh sailed from Newcastle. Had a lot of bad weather, was a bad sailor and the sheep suffered much, especially those on deck which got many a soaking. I assisted to feed and water them and to keep the pens free of dead. It took up lots of time and it was occasionally very dirty work. The skipper had lots of oranges on board and my best work was picking them over for him. So bad was the passage that we could not face Cooks Straits so as to reach Wellington, therefore a fair wind was made of it by shaping south about and so make Port Cooper the first Port. The flock had by this time dwindled to less than half their number and the cattle and horses the same. They were landed here but whether they were intended for Wellington I know not. Captain Collard remarked on his entrance to Port Cooper, that it must be a very good place; there was Capt Parsons the Pilot, Godley the founder, and Christchurch a town.

Sep. 4 - Sailed from Port Cooper and on Sep 8 arrived at Wellington having been on board the Duke of Roxburgh 32 days. This vessel appears to have been six months on her way from England to N.Z. in 1838 -9 therefore this voyage from Newcastle to N.Z. may prove against her character in that respect. After being 4 days in Wellington Sep 12 found me footing it to the Ahuriri District again, my stages being first day Taitai about miles, second day over the Rimutaka hills to Burlings at the foot, and third day across the Tauherinikau Plain, Morrisons and Ahiaruhi (Mr. Northwood's late Northwood and Tiffen) Miles.

1852 Sept 15 to 20th - remained at Ahiaruhi.

Sep 21. - Rode my mare, Black Bess, from Ahiaruhi to Mania (W.H. Donald) left mare here. Why or therefore I cannot say; next day on foot, and camped out near the coast.

Sep 23 - arrived Castle Point - always an hospitable place to reach, stayed 3 days. On 27 made Ahitio 28 Porongahau Pa and on 29th Waipukurau and Waitukai, the first residence on Homewood run of H.S.T. During my absence the 7 years partnership had come to an end; Mr. Northwood taking Ahiaruhi run in Wairarapa as also Pourere and Omakara Runs in the Ahuriri (or Hawkes Bay District) and his late partner H.S.T. taking Homewood run of about. acres. Waitukai on the banks of the Tuki tuki river was selected as a convenient spot for a woolshed and residence, as station stores and requisites had to be brought up that river from Napier, then known as Ahuriri, by canoes and the wool taken down by same means. Four bales of wool were generally taken by each canoe and it required steady balancy of the canoes to avoid getting the wool wet. On one occasion I had to go to Port Ahuriri to dry and re-pack wool which had so become wet.

Shearing was got through, self and others shearing at Waitukai H.S.T. self and Henderson and wife and 2 shearers occupying the residence, whilst 2 shepherds occupied a clay- and-batten cottage about 4 miles to westward (afterwards known as "Homewood" Proper).

I was at Waitukai about 3 months Oct-Dec shearing, lime-burning and dipping in the new lime-dip H.S.T. had thought proper to adopt - Result a failure Sheep-dipping in arsenic was also tried later on at Homewood. The brewing was strong enough and the fumes arising therefrom was effectual only in knocking the operators up. Each sheep was caught and a man on each side, holding 2 legs each, immersed it in the dib-tub and tossed it up on to the draining stage. The men's hands were constantly wet and parts of their body also and before the work was through they found it a difficult task even to button their coats or lace their boots.

1852 Jan 5 -

H.S.T. and self rode to Ahuriri (Nap) from Waitukai by middle road, and next day returned thereto.

Jan 7 - I made a start for Wellington on foot, reached E. Paraima Pa.

March 3 - Left Waitukai on foot intending to go to Wellington way, met J.D. Gunning at Eparima and next day returned with him to Garning and Hardings Station between Waipukurau and Waipawa (now Mount Vernon) R. Phararyn, T. Tanner & G. Wargan got river-bound with their sheep from Waterangi Station.

Wairarapa to Te Aute whilst I was at Mount Vernon and we took turns to do the cooking for about a week. Grinding wheat into flour being a big job for 7 or 8 months.

March 24 - Accepted employment from F.S. Abbott, Waipawa, where I remained nearly 4 months ending 18 July part of the time spent in a tent at back of the run where I was engaged building an outstation whare.

July 18 - Finds me back to Waitukai "boss" of the work, about a month which place he returned on Aug 26th.

Aug. 31 - From Waitukai (now Witherow) for Ahuriri for spirits of tar and damaged tobacco for scab curing. Returned 2nd appx.

"TIFFEN OF ELMSHILL"

Midnight! The hoot of a morepork! The new moon on its side shedding the faintest of light over the countryside. I'm at Elmshill, right in the middle of Hawkes Bay, the home of the Tiffen family for almost a hundred years, and four generations. Everyone else in the home is asleep, but I've been reading the Tiffen journal. The morepork hoots again, I put out the light and lie in the dark wondering how to present this journal to you.

Should I be dramatic and begin: "When Elmshill Station was started in 1859 Frederick Tiffen rode there on a bull, sharing its back with an arm-chair stuffed with horse hair?" Or should I be conventional? In the sober light of morning I decided it would be better that way, so here's my version of the Tiffen story.

Once upon a time, in the early eighteen-hundreds to be exact, there lived at Hythe in Kent a master printer named William Tiffen and his considerable family of children. He was a man of substance and saw to it that his boys were suitably educated and interested themselves in a profession. His oldest daughter married early and was lost to the family in the Pas De Calais; but his oldest son Henry Stokes, born in 1816, was articled to a surveyor, and aimed to put out his sign in one of the sleepy Kentish villages soon to be revolutionized by the railway.

One day when Henry was idly reading the Times and speculating, as a printer's son should, on the vast amount of ink needed to produce such a splendid edition, his eye caught an advertisement. "The New Zealand Company. For the settlement of Wellington. Wanted Surveyors."

It was 1841 and Henry was single and twenty-five. He was, too, in love with Caroline White who lived on the Parade at Hastings, and well aware that to marry her and set up in England as a surveyor was but a precarious living. To persuade her to come to New Zealand on a guaranteed salary now, to have a long sea voyage, to face adventure, to meet new friends - where mightn't that lead?

Henry squared his shoulders and, without saying a word to the family, saddled his horse at the first opportunity and rode into Hastings to put the case before Caroline.

Caroline was only sixteen and head over heels in love; and when her man painted the New Zealand picture in as glowing terms as you might imagine why, she tossed her ringlets and whispered, "Henry! Only Papa stand in the way."

Papa who was a naval captain, proved easy. He both knew and liked the Tiffens and even agreed to an early marriage and a passage being booked in the Brougham - provided, of course, that Henry could get his surveying appointment.

Henry did; and the marriage took place only ten days before the honey moon trip began. It was early in 1842 when Brougham entered Port Nicholson, and here Henry started on his three year surveying contract, while his wife led a quiet life waiting for the arrival of her first child, due in the spring of the year.

Alas! the birth was fraught with tragedy. Both mother and child died and Henry was beside himself with grief. No doubt it was his loneliness that made him write to his parents by every mail and urge that one of his younger brothers should come out and join him.

At first no heed was taken. Henry, the family thought, would return himself when his contract was over. But Henry was beginning to like the land of his adoption, and when the family learnt in one of his letters that in addition to being a surveyor he was now in partnership with a Mr Northwood as a sheepfarmer they sat up and took notice and were much more ready to heed the plea of Frederick, a younger son now sixteen, that he should be allowed to go out and join his brother.

Frederick arrived in Wellington in midwinter 1845 and although knowing nothing about stock, agreed with his brother, who met him, to throw in his lot with the partnership of Northwood and Tiffen and accept what employment might be offered.

Six weeks after his arrival, and just when he was beginning to get a grasp of matters colonial, a cargo of merino ewes arrived in Wellington from New South Wales, consigned to his employers.

Fred says in his journal - the journal, you'll remember, that kept me burning the midnight oil, and which the family has given me permission to paraphrase - "A few days after landing, the merinos from Australia were driven through Wellington's main street (Lambton Quay) and round the coast to my brother's place in the Wairarapa. The flock numbered between seven and eight hundred, and in charge of them were my brother and Northwood, old Mr. Pharazyn and myself, and three or four others. In addition we had a pack mare, two small pigs and later on a dozen head of cattle.

"After seventeen days' journey we reached the partners' place, Ahiaruhi, but out without some fun I can tell you. You could get round the Muka-muka rocks on the east coast beach at low tide only, and then it was a ticklish business; while on the Wharekaka Plain one mare was badly bogged and in her struggles smothered the two little porkers.

"Naturally, straight from England, I was pretty soft: so after a few days they gave me Billy the pack bull to ride, a bull with a ring through his nose and one rein to turn its head. I'm not going to pretend it was comfortable.

"Well, I stayed at Ahiaruhi for six months and then had my first holiday. I went to Wellington to the races - a four-day walk it was - and enjoyed the fun on Te Aro Flats. When I returned I found that Northwood and my brother had leased from the Maoris another run, situated close to where Masterton is today.

"Here, too, I worked, and after shearing we packed the wool on bullocks to the coast, then shipped it into whaleboats that rowed round to Port Nicholson.

"Soon I was considered experienced; and I was, too, much stronger, for by now I was nineteen. So I had the job of living in a tent and supervising outstation work - boundary riding, I suppose you would call it.

"In October 1848 we suffered the most severe earthquake imaginable. Not a chimney left standing or a house undamaged. Indeed, many people were killed and in Wellington the scene beggared description.

"About a year after this tragedy, that is to say midsummer 1849, Northwood and Tiffen somehow or other procured from the Maoris, for less than one hundred pounds per annum, an interest, in a huge block of property in Hawkes Bay - central Hawkes Bay - known today as Pourerere and Omakere. On part of the property I was soon managing for my brother; and on the other, Charles Nairn for Northwood - but that was later on.

"When the partners decided to stock this piece of fifty thousand acres, they did so from their Ahiaruhi run in the Wairarapa, and Northwood came with us. The drove took the eleven of us - six of whom were Maoris - just under a month, and during it the three thousand merinos improved in condition. You see, there were no other flocks about and the sheep could roam wherever they liked. It was a great show.

"Scab? Well yes! There were signs of it, but as early as this it was scarcely noticeable and we didn't worry much.

"When at last we arrived at Pourerere we separated the sheep into two mobs, and Davis the shepherd and I, built two little huts of totara bark and minded them on the spot. Was it lonely? Certainly it was. To the south the nearest white habitation was well down the Wairarapa; to the north at Auckland, as far as we knew.

What little stores we required, such as food, arsenic for scab, and tobacco, came to the coast in infrequent sailers; and thereby hangs a tale.

"Dutch Charlie, Collins, and myself - the first two were shepherds, although Collins afterwards owned a block of country - we three in the station whaleboat went aboard Gypsy the first sailer that called. We tied our boat to Gypsy's stern and had just begun to check over the stores when the wind changed and Gypsy started to drift up the coast. This wasn't too good, especially as the wind freshened; but worse was to follow - candidly, the result of our own carelessness. As the sea rose, somehow or other the whaleboat came adrift and we never saw her again.

"The wind now became a gale and we flew up the coast without a hope of landing. Fortunately a chance came at Port Ahuriri - for there was no thought of Napier in 1849 - and glad we were to take advantage of it and land. Soon we found that the only house was on the western spit - a store and trading station it was - where quantities of pigs from all parts were slaughtered, pickled, or made into bacon by Messrs Alexander and Ankertel.

"With these friendly traders we stayed the night, and the next morning left on foot for Pouterere. We had no intention, we said to ourselves, of missing a courtesy call on the Rev. W. Colenso at his Waitangi Mission, and this was savoured with enjoyment, for Colenso was an excellent host. We soon afterwards forded the Tukituki River and walked the beach to Kidnapper Cliffs. It was then a case of endless hills before we arrived back at Pouterere.

"I paid dearly for the carelessness that led us into this unnecessary activity. I had to carry back with me, on my back, a twenty-pound bag of arsenic. I can tell you it gave me a nice sore neck, chafing the skin and rubbing in the fine poisonous powder.

"Well, before long we were better placed in the way of trading. We opened communications with a nearer branch store opened at Tui-nga-ra by Alexander and Ankertel. Here Jack McAllister managed and, buying from the Maoris a rare lot of pigs, he would set to work and pickle them. He was regular at his work was Jack, and soon it paid a trader to call once a month and take away the meat and bring - much to our relief for we were come down at times to drinking manuka for tea - fresh stores and what you won't guess - sly goods!

"So much for early communications, and now for something that happened on the station itself.

"In 1850, years before Samuel Williams was at Te Aute, I engaged as general rouseabout, a William Good, who gave the name of Anderson. Certainly he was a good chap and could whistle to beat the band. Now, a large vessel, the General Palmer, that had been anchored in Wellington, was condemned as unseaworthy and tied up indefinitely out in the harbour with a young man named Jones as caretaker. Here he had been visited previously by this Good I employed, and quarrel evidently ensuing, Good killed him and shoved him head first into a large barrel of pork brine that stood on deck.

"Good cleared out and had no sooner turned his charms on us at Pouterere than the police got on to his tracks, visited us, and arrested him. Now the police took him to Wellington I've forgotten, but not so the three-hundred-mile walk I had to make when subpoena'd as a witness. Sergeant Scott accompanied me and three Maoris were in at the start. However, they soon dropped off, calling us manu (birds) and we saw no more of them. Nor do I wonder, for Scott and I were great walkers and, fording all the rivers and pushing through bush, we reached Wellington in ten days, in time for the trial. Good was found guilty and executed.

"Don't think for a moment that this was the only trouble of that sort I experienced! Troops had arrived at Auckland to fight Hone Heke and there were plenty of deserters. Where better for them than isolated Pouterere? It got quite a reputation as a hide-out, and the entire Hawkes Bay area began to go by the name of "Save-all". I could tell you plenty of deserter stories.

"In 1852 I left the service of Northwood and Tiffen. I'd then been with them for three and a half years in the Wairarapa, and three years on Omakere, during which latter period I'd scarcely seen a white woman or child. What I wanted was a proper change and you'll never guess my decision.

"I decided to cross to Australia. A gold rush had broken out in Victoria and that meant life and excitement. So I sailed from Wellington in the Brigantine William Alfred with plenty of passengers also afflicted with gold fever.

What a grand city was Sydney, though how the money flew! Soon I joined up as a trooper in the mounted patrol - gold escort you understand - and presently was hard at work drilling. When I qualified I was sent to

Wentworth Falls and, feeling very important, was fitted out with carbine, sword, pistols, and horse, and told to report at Bathurst to a Sergeant McGrath officer-in-charge.

"Most of the gold was carried in iron boxes nine inches by nine inches but some was in heavy linen bags. Not for one moment was it left unguarded however sleepy the escort after a long hot day travelling on the dusty tracks.

There were twelve of us guarding the gold, and I was the only total abstainer. That meant, of course, a social cleavage - you men will understand. It meant, too, that I saved money whereas my mates on pay day would blow the lot, and likely enough get into some sort of trouble.

"And if that wasn't unsettling there were the flies! Every house swarmed with them, and on horseback the shady side of the horse, and our own clothes, carried them by thousands.

"Maybe it was the flies, or if not the flies, the ants that insinuated themselves into the honey, the jam, and the sugar, that made me restless. Having as I've said, saved my money, I had little difficulty in obtaining my discharge and, although it was winter and snow lay on parts of the Blue Mountains I set off for Sydney on foot, determined to return to New Zealand by the first ship offering.

"In Sydney I made immediate enquires concerning a berth to New Zealand, but without much success. Indeed, it wasn't until I ran across a Mr. Sidey, who was making a pile shipping sheep across to the new-found settlement of Canterbury, that prospects brightened.

"From Sidey I learnt that he had chartered the Duke of Roxburgh, the fine immigrant vessel that had brought to Wellington in 1840 the Hunters, afterwards of Porongahau, and Dr Monteith and his family. Sidey had chartered his ship from Newcastle to Lyttelton and, being short of shepherds, was willing to listen to a proposition I put up to him.

"I'll tell you what," he said "If you help with the sheep, and the trip's successful, I won't charge you any fare. Otherwise" - well, there was no "Otherwise". I agreed with his suggestion straightaway, and when the Duke of Roxburgh anchored off Sydney Cove I at once went on board and sailed in her for Newcastle.

"Here it took a fortnight to outfit the ship for stock - alterations, fodder, and so on - and load twelve hundred sheep, fifty horses, and forty cattle. You see, she was a big ship for the job, 417 tons. It was 23 July when we sailed, and we were no sooner at sea than bad weather overtook us, and the barque, a fine sailor under good conditions, proved almost unmanageable.

"All the sheep suffered, but as you'll readily understand, those on deck the most, for they were continually wet, I took my share of cleaning the pens and of going the rounds with fodder and fresh water, but really the hardest task was lifting the dead out and dragging them to the side, up over the bulwarks, and into the sea.

"These highly unpleasant tasks went on for days and days, and the weather seldom abated. The only cheery spot was a dump of oranges the skipper had brought on board, for when once or twice I picked these over for him, I of course helped myself.

"So bad was the weather as we approached New Zealand, we couldn't face Cook's Strait so as to reach Wellington. Therefore a fair wind was made of it by shaping south-about, so making Port Cooper (Lyttelton) the first port.

"The fine flock of twelve hundred merinos had by this time dwindled to less than half, and the horses and cattle the same, and I can tell you we were glad to get inside the heads. Skipper remarked as he came in, "It must be a very good place this. Parsons is the pilot, Godley the founder, and Christchurch the town." It cheered us up a bit.

The unloading took no time and on the eighth of September we sailed into Port Nicholson (Wellington) thirty-two days after leaving Newcastle.

Cents:-

Again I lost no time, but set out on foot for Hawkes Bay via the Rimutakas and Wairarapa.

"Here I found great changes had taken place. The seven year partnership of Northwood and Tiffen had come to an end. Northwood had taken the Ahirahi run in the Wairarapa as well as Fourerere and Omakere in Hawkes Bay, as his share; my brother Henry the Homewood run near Waipukurau.

"Naturally, Homewood was my destination, and here at a spot called Waitukai on the banks of the Tuki-tuki River, I found Henry hard at work building a house and a woolshed. It was obvious why he had chosen this particular spot. All his stores and requisites had to come from Ahuriri (Napier) and by far the easiest way was up the Tuki-tuki River by canoes poled by Maoris.

"When it came to shearing, getting the wool downstream in the same manner wasn't so easy. Four bales would be loaded into each canoe and the balancing of these was a feat. Not uncommonly, I'd have to walk the fifty miles to Ahuriri, there to unpack the wool and dry it. But still we had to pay the Maoris one pound a fadge for bring it down - I suppose a capsize or two had added to their work, too.

"Well, I must hurry over the next few years, for in the main they were vexatious. Henry went to England, and I spent a lot of time with J.D. Carning at Mount Vernon, later the property of the Harding family. I tackled scab in deadly earnest, I road inland and visited Lake Taupo, and I walked to and from Wellington many times, often carrying tobacco for dipping.

"In 1856 I was appointed inspector of sheep - a part-time job at a salary of one hundred pounds per annum - and my duties took me into every corner of Hawkes Bay. This was a chance too good to lose, and everywhere I went I looked, though without success, for a property suitable for a man of my small means.

"You see I knew that my brother Henry was about to return from England and when he did I could resign the managership of his Homewood property. I certainly did this when the time came, but imagine my surprise when he landed at Wellington from the barque Westminster, not only with Ansell, my youngest brother aged twenty, my sister Mary, two shepherds, and some rams, but with a second wife! Yes! his deceased wife's older sister Louisa Anne. He must have married her in France where some of the Tiffens were living - what do you say - for such a marriage would never have been allowed in England. Like her sister's married life, Louisa's was tragic. She too lost her life in childbirth and the baby also died - although that was much later on.

"I didn't stay in Wellington long to welcome the newcomers and was back at Homewood when Ansell arrived with the first of the imported sheep - the rams. They were unique! Rambouillet rams from France! And was Brother crestfallen when one of our best - known squatters discovered that one of his so called rams was a wether!

"With Ansell on the spot, I felt I could in fairness leave Homewood, and the year 1857 that followed was a carefree one financially, for I added the job of inspector of brands to that of inspector of sheep.

"However, by degrees the squatters mastered the dread scab and my duties correspondingly lessened. So much so, that early in 1858 when Captain Carlyon purchased Gwavas Station from Charles and Edward Pharasyn, I was prevailed upon to manage the property for the new owner. My boss, the captain was hardy. Cold bath every morning and in winter I'd hear him break the ice!

"On 2nd May my new duties began, for that was the day that the changover of stock ownership was made. With Gwavas to manage, the irreproachable Carlyons to wonder at, my two government jobs and another station to look after - Milbourns belonging to Stokes Brothers - I was busy, happy, and financially independent.

"You'll guess what my next visit to Wellington concerned - and indeed many visits past. I'd fallen in love with the sweetest of girls: Lucy, the daughter of Dr. Monteith, and nineteen years old.

I put my case to her father and was accepted, and on 2nd February 1859 we were married. We allowed three weeks for our honeymoon, and then left Wellington in the steamboat Wonga-wonga for Napier. Of course I had to stay at Homewood and show her off to Henry and his wife, and to Ansell, but by May we were happily settled in at Gwavas.

"The life of a stock inspector was a roving one, and although in my long absences the Carlyons were kindness itself to Lucy, I could see that somehow or other we'd have to have our own property, and on it our own home.

"One day, when Lucy and I had ridden across to Homewood to see Ansell, we we spied some most attractive land as yet unoccupied. Lucy laughingly said, "Fred, that's just the sort of place we want." I couldn't agree quickly enough, but, reining in my horse, I banteringly continued, "The imagination of women is something to wonder at, Lucy. To buy that block - its Government land - would cost thousands, and you know my position!"

"We rode on, but Lucy, I could see, was deep in thought. Finally she called to me to rein in again, and when we were side by side turned to me in all seriousness and said:

"I Know your position Freddy; but I've a father and after all what are fathers made for? You'll maybe think me mad, but what about acting on the spur of the moment? What about the both of us making a surprise trip to Wellington? The surveyors are there. The maps are there. That's where Crown grants are made, and there my love, is where the money lies - well, perhaps!"

Behold then, in a day or two, Lucy and I on our way back to the capital, where in proper fairy-book style, "the Governor" - Monteith that is - came to light; and four hundred acres of Elmhill, for that was thensame we afterwards gave the place, was Crown-granted to us.

"Fine country without a doubt, the block nevertheless, was unfenced and unstocked. On the hills it was covered in fern and the valleys were little better than swamps.

"Early in 1860 I surrendered my farm managerships and took Lucy to Homewood which happened to be close to Elmhill. In the autumn I pitched a tent on our own block and got to work, building a clay house of three rooms. It was a race against time really; for Lucy was "Expecting", but I managed it and to spare, and on 6th April I loaded all our worldly goods, and they were few, onto one of the Homewood pack horses and had the little horse spick and span before I gently brought Lucy across.

"A month afterwards our first child was born, George William, the first of seven, and soon we were a very happy trio I can tell you.

"Before long I had increased my holding to about a thousand acres and began to stock the place. Already I had bought six hundred - odd sheep to pasture on terms at Mount Vernon, and when these were driven to Elmhill, the three Tiffens made a state call to look us over and appraise my purchase of stock. I wonder what they said privately on the way back!

"By the time shearing came around, in November 1861, I had increased my holding to thirteen hundred acres, and over the years continued to by until in the end I had about nine thousand acres. Need I add that every two years my wife presented me with a bonny child, so in a way, you see, I gained on both the swings and roundabouts.

"Of course I had my troubles, and folk who used to think us Tiffens hot headed may have had something.

"On one occasion I got to gripe with a neighbour, A. Chapman of Edenham - a partner in Rhodes and Chapman; money, influence, everything! He had my sheep mustered under warrant because of some stragglers of his amongst them. Maybe that was all right, but after my enforced drafting he never called for them, in the end I charged him grazing and poundage - and for eight of his bullocks into the bargain.

"What a scene when word of this reached him! He came on to the place and got at me with a handle of his whip, while I retaliated with a spade. Blood flowed freely; and there I was, brought to earth and nearly choked, besides receiving a christening of gore.

'Then his dogs attacked my sheep and I shot them, and so for a whole year we squabbled and retaliated and aired our grievances in court.

'On another occasion I had to intervene over trouble between the Watts Brothers and J. Buchanan. I got no thanks for that! Watts served me with notice of compulsory muster and when the sheep were yarded according to law, why, Buchanan came along at night, let 'em out and shot up one of the musterer's dogs. Nice, wasn't it? Especially when other musterers started to roll the wool out of the woolshed, smashed gates and cut peep - holes in the woolshed itself. In the end we had to have the police along.

'We forgot our troubles of 1870, however, when one day big guns started to boom in the distance. For three days they kept it up at intervals of from three to ten seconds, and then there was a nasty earthquake, followed next day by six explosions. It was the eruption of Tarawera and the destruction of the Pink and White Terraces, though in my day-to-day journal I called the show Tongariro instead of Tarawera - we all did then.

'When in 1875 I journeyed to Wellington, to attend the funeral of Henry's wife Louisa, what a city I found it. I hadn't been there for sixteen years. I mention this, for in my early days as a colonist I walked to and from Wellington over thirty times - and no fallen arches - a matter of ten or twelve thousand miles of hard going.

'My poor Henry, a widower for the second time now, seemed to cave in, if I can put it that way, and spent the rest of his days quietly at Napier. He had no children and few expenses, and when he died his estate ran into six figures. Life for me was different - harder yet happier. I admit my troubles; indeed I've told you a few; but not withstanding, Elmskill was gradually brought in and just as gradually prosperity came to my family, who continued to farm the property.

'I was over eighty when Bleriot first crossed the English Channel in an aeroplane, and fat lambs began to fetch almost a pound a head. Goodness me, what a price! Why, when I first began work for Northwood and Tiffen, in 1846 they paid me fifteen pounds a year; then twenty pounds a year; then twenty-six then thirty, and lastly the princely sum of thirty-two pounds. Five years on those wages! You couldn't marry on 'em. No! But there was a wonder about life, a freedom, a sense of adventure that folk today, it would seem, must go to war to obtain. Give me the good old days of struggle; and were I young again, another Elmskill to break in - and another Hawkes Bay to open up.'

THE END

On a young lad boarded the good ship "Lousia Campbell" at St. Catherine's dock. He little thought of all the adventures that would befall him. Neither did he think of the trials and tribulations that would be his lot in a new and untamed land. He didn't know that some 5 years earlier the Ship "Duke of Roxburgh" carried those who were to become closely connected to him by marriage.

"Lousia Campbell" sailed from England on Oct. 16th 1845, young Fred Tiffen's 16th birthday. On board with him as shipmates was a youngster named Thompson, a Mr. Murray and Mr. Reynolds, whom Fred said were both "Tipplers". There were Hill Charlton - a nephew - and a Mr. Bushell, an old Channel Capt. who for some reason or other was making his fortune scarce.

Another Captain the "Louisa Campbell" carried to try his luck in a new land was John Goddard, who rose to fame in the Colonial Army, Taranaki. Oh Yes! there was also on board the enterprising young landy who opened a Milliners shop at Te Aro, Wellington. The ship called at St. Jago and Cape Verdi Island on its way to New Zealand and the voyage took four months.

When they arrived at Nelson they found it a very ticklish business getting into the harbour, especially as the "Pifeshire Rock" stood in the way. Mud flats spread around everywhere and the sailors made good use of the mussels that thrived there. Young Fred wasn't too keen on seeing the sights of Nelson, being nervous of the Maoris and their round their market places, which were built of brick. They were both noisy and

The ship stayed in Nelson harbour 11 days. They anchored in Wellington on June 24th. A few days later a cargo of merino sheep arrived from New South Wales for the partners, Messrs Northwood. Henry Tiffen, brother of Fred Tiffen came to N.Z. five years before and they leased from the Maoris about 8,000 acres of land at Ahiaruhi - in the Bay of Plenty at a rental of £12 a year.

Now I know, looking back into the history over the years, at the changes that have taken place in our every day lives and the prices paid for land, it really seems fantastic. Young Fred's first job was driving about 800 sheep for Messrs. Tiffen & Northwood, along the main street of Wellington.

It would be a difficult job taking one sheep thro' Wellington City today wouldn't it? At Wainui-o-mata they added to their livestock 1/2 doz. head of cattle, a mare and 2

They journeyed round the coast, beset with obstacles in those days. But which later proved after the 'quake and upheaval of land in the Wairapapa.

It was only at low tide, and then only if the tide was well out, that a rocky point was negotiated. Muka Muka point was a dangerous place but even that was made safe after the 'quake.

The Maoris ferried the sheep across the Lake. They were easily caught and tied as they had no time to recover from the long sea voyage but they weren't to escape misfortune as they were carrying the pigs got bogged and were suffocated. Young Fred said the mishap could have been avoided had more attention been paid to them. They still had to get round the rocks. The men were up before daylight piling up stones at one point for the sheep to go over, driving a tunnel thro' another point known later as "Coles Hole" after the Rev. Mr. Coles visited there at one time. Riders were forced to go into the sea at low tide to get the sheep and. Life was full of trials and tribulations for those Early Settlers and young Fred was learning the hard way. The 'quake made a great difference and it's an easy job now getting round the points even at high tide. The party then passed over Rhodes Hills, between the "Brownacorn House" and Wainui-a-mata, near Orongorongo, where the Tiffens lived.

The only dog to help them was "Old Bob" and he wouldn't have been much use if the sheep had been in high fettle.

It was about 40 miles to Ahearuhi from the landing station at Te Kopi for household goods and other necessities. At shearing the wool was taken by the same transport they used to take goods to the sheep station. Loads that were unevenly balanced were made up with stones. It was long and arduous work. All travelling was done on foot, 5 days being the usual time for the journey. Young Fred used a bull as his pack animal altho' mule, horse, and dog were used too. The bull had a ring in his nose and riding was rather a painful one when perched on a pack saddle and only one guiding rein. Well, that just goes to prove the old story, told by young Fred of a man who agreed to graze some mules for an annual fee. The price agreed on, a third of any progeny born to the mules, suited both parties, especially the Australian! Mules don't breed so I'll leave you to guess what the man who grazed them said.

Sometimes the Tiffens and neighbours went for stores making six loads to be carried. They packed about 2 tons of wool at their first shearing, which was repacked at Te Kopi into bales ready to ship to Wellington. A pair of harrows was once used as a pack made snug with a few score yards of calico. Such were some of the difficulties of those far off

Young Fred said, "Just wait until the lambing season" no doubt thinking of all ery rhymes he'd heard "Little Bo-peep and "Little Boy Blue". All he'd would have could be to stretch out on the nice green grass, listen to the birds carolling and watch little lambs gambolling round their mothers. He soon found that lambing was just a period of hard work and that drowsing in the sunshine was well, just a fairy tale. Wasn't chasing the flock trying to keep them within bounds, often at night by light, he was feeding the motherless lambs or changing the lambing ground. Sheep in any direction but the right one causing confusion and some lurid remarks. Young Fred wondered the percentage was low at docking time."

Shearing wasn't as easy as it is today, it was done by hand by Jim Coutts and his Charlie Cameron. Each fleece was rolled and tied with a strip of flax. Locks and p were left loose. A wool pack, known as a three quarter bale was suspended by its corners to the roof, the fleeces packed in by treading them down to make 100lbs bale taking to the coast, where they are repacked for shipment to Wellington.

It soon became a nightmare, especially as there was no known cure and everything was trial and error - mostly error. Burnt lime was tried, carried from the foothills of the hills. That proved useless, then arsenic was tried but the only thing this did was upset the men who got so thoroughly wet they could neither lace their boots nor their clothes. I have often heard the remark "Who'd be a Farmer?" But I think it truly have been said by those who blazed the trail for future generations.

In 1846 young Fred walked all the way to Wellington to see the races which at that time were held on Te Aro flat in Jan. of each year. His next visit to Wellington was to a more painful nature.

Young Fred was at Tainanui outstation - which was occupied by the Shepherd and his Maori wife. He was evidently in a playful mood. While helping the shepherd build a chimney he threw a lump of clay at the Maori woman, she retaliated by throwing her waist band over Fred's head and hit him back so that he fell heavily to the ground putting his shoulder out of its socket. The Maori woman seemed to know what was wrong and tried bathing the swelling with opodeldock solution.

For nearly three weeks of pain Fred walked to Wellington via the Coast, where Dr. Dorset cured the dislocation by a series of hard pulls and Fred said "He put me into stays" I'm sure if these were the type of harness women wore in those days to control their figures! At the time the third shearing came around, Mr. Charles Nairn had built a drey for carrying wool. I was a very primitive affair, the wheels were made from a large Kahikatea, or totara tree, anyway it did the job much better than by pack mule or bullock. The bullocks objected, they strongly objected to being turned into pack animals, with a bale of wool on top and perhaps one on top.

Young Fred's bull "Old Billy" was a docile creature, but civilization caught up on him. Chairs were found to be more comfortable than stools or blocks to sit on. A case of chairs were sent for and on arrival were packed with a corresponding weight on to the well: that was the end of poor "Old Billy", he strained his heart and died.

Worms were a terrible menace, and problem, especially when the men were camping. They'd complain about the dry leaves making a great noise, then they would run up the mens' legs or meat slung in the stream overnight, they had a merry time, altho' themen did catch a hundred of the vermin in a gin trap - pinning their tails to a pine tree as a lesson for the others.

Wild dogs were another great trial to the early settler, they took a great toll of the men and generally made the mens' lives a misery. In desperation the men would climb a mountain over looking Tiratahi flats, make as much noise as possible even to letting off a small gun, until finally it burst.

At this time the Teratahi plains were covered with small nice plants - the sheep ate it and kept straying away to get it, being an annual it never grew again. Bayonet fern and papai too grew in clusters of 50 - 100 as well as prickly baynotes, a thorny plant which was firmly believed by the Maoris to have formed the "Crown of Thorns" at Christ's crucifixion.

The Maoris had a strict code of honour when leasing land to Europeans, so says young Tiffen. They adhered to any bargain made between them and respected the primitive laws made. Rent was usually paid in coin of the realm, which promptly came back as payment for goods bought from the white man by the Maori.

Young Tiffen seemed to be a young man with the wanderlust fully developed. He was off on this time with Mr. Nairn, the Wellington, walking from Ahiahuhi over the Rimutakas. On the way they took, breaking their journey at Burlings accommodation house, was across the hills past Hodders Collins, Mangaroa Buck, Taitai, and Burchenms. The Hutt was at the bush all the way from the foot hills on the Wairapapa side. There is no doubt that young Fred had lived to day he'd have stood a good chance of qualifying as a world champion in the Olympic games.

Such an earthquake occurred in 1848 as made young Fred remark that it "Wasn't such as to make a song about nowadays, but a real chimney levelling, earth cracking, terror inducing article." 1848 was a long way off from 1931 wasn't it?

The people ate their food picnic fashion in Wellington. All chimneys were down and they had to return to the good old campoven to do their cooking. There was only one person able to supply bread and he was under contract to supply the Military Troops, with only one man intact, so he wasn't much help.

The Medical Hall was in a pickle - medicines, salves and lotions all jumbled together

por. As was to be expected the people got panicky and hurriedly boarded a ship ave for Australia, where the earth didn't heave and undulate.
just as hurriedly returned when the ship was wrecked when clearing the Heads -

FRED TIPPEN.

The distinction of leasing the first "run" in Hawkes Bay fell to the lot of Mr. Good, one time partner of Mr. Henry Tiffen. He had as his partner, Mr. Charles Nairn, besides being a farmer was a very able linguist. Mr. Northwood had no talent for this. This was a great asset in those days especially in view of the many Foreigners coming into the country. Mr. Northwood leased the "runs", about 50,000 acres, to the Maoris at a rental of £100 a year. Cheap wasn't it in comparison with today's runs were situated, one at Pourerere and the other at Omakere. The Pourerere was only fit to graze merino sheep but the Omakere one was a good "run." While the Pourerere "run" had hills clothed with ferns from top to bottom, the Omakere one was good and with moderate hills. The sheep thrived there but scab was a persistent evil. Fred Tiffen and Mr. Northwood, with the help of Charlie Cameron, alias "Dutch Charlie" took horse set out from Ahiaruhe to the East Coast, six Maoris and another white man accompanying them. They took twenty eight days to drive 3,000 sheep down the river Pahau to the many crossings to Cameron's "run" on the Coast, then on to Castlepoint reaching there just a month later. Then 2,000 of the sheep were driven to Omakere by Fred Tiffen and Charlie Cameron. Mr. Edward Collins was appointed station manager at the Pourerere and the Maoris built him a house which served as a Homestead.

Wild dogs soon made their presence felt. Many sheep were lost at Omakere, there were less than twenty one visits from these creatures in ten months. The men were so scared by the brutes they set to work and built themselves two huts, one to toi and one for a bark. They were able to watch the sheep from these huts while the feed lasted and had to build another one. They used the others to grind wheat and as a yard for sheep - they were the only yards on the "run". Often they never saw a living soul but the Maoris, although they had an occasional visit from the Maoris when at the depot. Once in a while out of tea, which often happened, they improvised, making a brew from Pori-Pori (a).

When Fred Tiffen and Charlie Cameron left with Edward Collins, the Pourerere Station manager, to bring stores in. They boarded the "Gypsy" expecting to find a station manager on board attending to things. A gale blew up - the ship dragged her anchor and they were forced to make sail. Having a smaller boat in tow, they intended to put in at a safe spot further along the coast but before that haven was reached the small boat drifted and they were compelled to make for Port Ahuriri. Wasn't life one of great interest in those days?

A store and trading station was kept there by Messrs. Ankertill and Alexander where they pickled, salted or made pigs into bacon. The only house at the Port at that time was built on the Western Spit. The party left next morning on foot for Pourerere and arrived at Waitangi upon the Reverend W. Colenso. They then made their way across the hills to the Ki River along the beach to Cape Kidnappers, walked along the track across the hills to the southern end of the Cape of Waimarama, over the hills to Te Apiti, along the coast to Pourerere. Poor Fred's neck was rubbed raw, he was carrying a 20 pound bag of arsenic and it not only chafed his neck badly but had rubbed in the arsenic for good measure..

Tui - nga - ra (sew the sails) was a branch of the pig pickling industry kept by Jack M. Mather, who according to Fred, "Brought and pickled a rare lot of pigs." A vessel came once a month bringing fresh stores and taking away the cured meat. It was about this time that young Fred Tiffen and Mrs. Guthrie of Castlepoint became involved in a trial. They were served with a subpoena to appear at the Wellington Court, to give evidence. Although three men were actually involved - two were acquitted.

It appears that the ship "General Palmer", condemned as unseaworthy, was laid up in Lyttelton Harbour and a caretaker named Jones put on board as watchman. His dead body was found and stuffed into a pork cask. The murderer tracked up the East Coast from Wellington to Lyttelton Constable Oxenham after him. On arriving at Pourerere he was told that Good - the murderer - had gone to Omakere. There was of course no telephones in those days to give a hint of trouble approaching, so the constable got Morena and another Maori to help him capture the men. The constable used a little strategy in arresting the men, two of whom were deserters from the 65th Regiment. Fred Tiffen, who owing to pressure of work was at dawn, noticed the two Maoris about half a mile away but he wasn't disturbed about it. However the Maoris continued to come on and Morena handed a Placard to Fred Tiffen which had printed on it "Kohuru" (meaning murder) £100 a hutu - £100 reward. There was also a seal "Tera Taki" (the other side) and Fred says "While I was reading it he collared me and then told the other Maori to "Mau Tetaha" (take the other) and Fred says that "I arrested the deserter". They were marched off to Pourerere, so Fred lost two hands at that busy time.

The man Good had worked at Omakere for a day or two and in his diary Fred says "I gave away a serge shirt for a little coat I thought I looked well in". Good gave his name as Anderson and was a very popular member of the Station hands, being very good company and adept at whistling. So you see it never does to take a person always on face value, but soon found out. Good was believed to have been a Deserter from the Australian Army. Good and McAusland were taken to Wellington and as I have mentioned were acquitted of their crimes. However Fred Tiffen had to appear at the trial, so in the company of Sergeant was a good walker and some Maoris they set out on their journey. The Maoris of trying to keep pace with them and left them saying they were "Manu".....Birds. third day from Pourerere saw them at Castlepoint, a Schooner arriving that evening Mrs. Guthrie, Fred and Plice to Wellington. Mrs. Guthrie had been served with a to appear in Court having received a pair of boots from the murderer Good. d to continue my walk to Wellington", says Fred and arrived for the trial on 1850, neither the coat nore the boots threw any light on the murder. Good was lty and hanged a few days later. Fred was very peeved because the Government o pay mileage from Castlepoint to Wellington, he said "In that I dare say they were I didn't think so at the time."

could be inclined to laugh at the idea of Hawkes Bay being a great place for whales! as, but Poverty Bay was even more favoured and it was to this place all Deserters e criminals seemed to make, thus earning for it the name of "Save - all."

as from Deserters from the 65th Regiment that squatters drew their white labour. these men, named Calridge, Moor and Green were employed on the Pourerere run. Fred, who had been shearing while suffering from a nagging tooth, was resting on half dressed, when he was shaken awake by his Boss - Mr. Collins - a rather rude g - as there standing beside his bed was Sergeant Sculley, who later became Inspector e for Hawkes Bay, also Morena, whom we have met before, and a Corporal Ben, looking nness like carrying a short sword, something like those bandsmen wore in the army. eant Sculley made no bones about what they were after. He said "We are soldiers n of deserters." Green and Moor were captured and left in the care of Corporal Ben, e Sergeant Sculley went across country to Onakere hoping to intercept any deserters. oved to be the worst form of strategy because Calridge remained hidden in the d, so Mr. Collins and Fred made up their minds to help the prisoners escape. They orema, whose chance came when the Corporal, wishing to absent himself for a short nded his pistol to the Maori, putting him in charge of the two escapers. This was chance to earn more by letting the men to free than by keeping them captives. So en flew like birds from a cage, with Morena running after them making a great n and making a great to do. Corporal Ben of course heard the commotion, guessed happened, and rushing round the house made a real figure of fun, clutching his while trying to run and tripping up at every step. The prisoners hid themselves in fern and Fred Tiffen fed them while they waited for Mr. Northwood to return from and pay them the few shillings owing to them.. They got tired of waiting, or were afraid justice would catch up on them, anyway they accepted a few stops and which would do for currency in those days, and made their way to "Save-all" rters Paradise. After all this excitement Fred felt in need of a change of so he started off once more to walk to Wellington en route to Australia.

ator Featherstone had expressed a wish to see a bridle track cut through the le bush to Ahuriri, which was the name given to the whole country north of the le bush and was part of the Wellington Province. £100 was the cost of cutting ck 8 to 10 yards wide and Fred wanted to see what sort of a job cutting such a ould be. He intended going through the bush to the Wairarapa. On January, 10th set out and his first day's walk brought him to Waipukurau Pa where he picked up a uide. The next day saw him at Takapau and on the 13 th day he entered the bush, rain ily that he camped under a large tree and the next day was glad to stop at ra Pa to dry out. On January fifteenth he found a fresh guide, passed Hututahi Pa, at Ngawapara Pa arriving next day at Ahiaruhi. He thinks he must have overed seventy miles of bush but considered cutting a track would be a heavy job or £100.

he Natives strongly opposed the project as they firmly believed it would have been as e taking possession.

ly one other European had journeyed through the bush and he only went part of the riking off to the right via Manawatu Gorge. Otherwise the route had been untrodde n by Natives.

However Fred Tiffen, by Request, submitted to a report to Mr. Ludham of the Sial Council, giving his opinion of the track. He doesn't tell us what the outcome all was, perhaps he forgot in the excitement of going to Australia, but I'll tell out that later.

"TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS OF AN EARLY PIONEER"

FRED TIFFEN

- Florence Malkin.

eagerness of youth and the ever increasing need to see or try something must have prompted Fred Tiffen to try his luck in a new land and so on Jan 20th see him setting off to Wellington en route to Australia. He didn't sail until Feb the Brigantine "William Alfred" with Captain Tinnley as Skipper and several passengers suffering from gold fever and were off to make a quick fortune, or so they took a fortnight to reach Sydney and Fred was astonished to see what he termed "A city so far away from home".

Fred had to make a living, so instead of catching gold fever he decided to get the gold instead.

He joined the gold Police, who escorted the gold from the gold fields at Turon to Sydney. After serving as a Trooper for a short time he was sent to Carters Barracks to drill and mounted drill. He was later sworn in by Captain Batty and received his equipment, a brace of pistols carbine sword and a horse, Fred said he left Weatherboard "Well armed and no doubt feeling very important". He then took up his duties as a guard of the gold.

His first escort fell on Queen Victoria's birthday. When the mail coach arrived at Sydney the escort received the gold from the Commissioner taking it to the gold police for the night, with Fred Tiffen to mount guard. His duty was from 8 p.m. to 4 a.m., which doesn't sound very long but Fred had had a long day's ride and was feeling tired, more ready for bed than guarding gold.

There was a roaring fire in the guard room and his companions were sound asleep. Fred tried hard to keep awake. He put his pistols on the table loaded and ready for instant use if necessary. For a seat he had two gold filled boxes measuring 9 x 9 inches which he sat on a down filled cushion and kept Fred from nodding off to sleep. Fred says "Besides the gold there was a small bag of gold about the size of my fist, when in my jacket pocket it felt unpleasantly heavy, so I put that on the table" but Fred seems to have been very nervous about it, he goes on "Whilst on the table I was afraid it might be collared" for I was very sleepy after a long day's ride military fashion and a log fire by which I sat. He was "mighty glad" to be relieved at midnight as there was gun firing and lots of noise by the Miners who were celebrating the Queen's birthday very noisily".

It may be of interest for you to know what the Escort uniforms were in those days. The gold Police were mounted men having similar arms and uniforms. Hip jackets of pilot cloth and trousers of the same, strapped with bazil but the cap of the gold Police had a black top and Fred said "our head covering was a black cabbage tree". A pair of cloth trousers strapped with bazil was worn on state occasions. When not on duty they had to Patrol the highways leading in and out of Bathurst, nothing happened on the highways during Fred's stay there.

Every day always meant trouble of some kind, Fred was abstainer but as he said "The others were drinking their grog, they were a decent lot of fellows who liked light word" but "they always got to get a black mark and sometimes a discharge."

Ants there were in swarms, they were every where, crowding on to the mens' clothes and biting by the thousand, ants helped to complete their misery. If they carried anything of a stinging nature there were the ants having a lovely time.

Fred soon tired of Australia and yearned for his adopted country. He made his way to Sydney and left Newcastle on the "Duke of Roxburgh" whose Captain was a Mr. Collard. This was a fine Immigrant ship once but was reduced to stock carrying.

Fred Tiffen decided to part work his passage back to New Zealand. It took a fortnight to load the ship with 1,000 sheep, 50 horses and 40 cattle. The vessel left Newcastle on the 23rd 1852. The weather came up rough, Fred wasn't a good sailor and neither was the stock, which Fred had to care for. They had to be fed and watered - altho' they were plenty of that from the seas that swept over them but it was the wrong kind. He had to keep the pens clean and get rid of the dead. Before that voyage was over Fred began to feel seasick at the bottom of the sea and that he hadn't agreed to work his passage home. He found one easy job, the Captain had brought a lot of oranges on board so Fred enjoyed picking them over. The weather got worse and then Captain wouldn't risk going round Cook's Strait to reach Wellington, he put into Port Cooper instead. The stock were depleted in numbers only half the number landed, which was bad for Fred, as he'd agreed that if the trip was successful he'd pay nothing. Well it was a long way from success - Fred remarks "It was the wrong way for me, I paid a trifle of my trifling balance".

Mr. Collard said on entering Port Cooper that it must be a ~~good~~ good place, there was a Mr. Farsons the Pilot, Godley the Founder and Christchurch a town.

Fred made way to his brother's run at Ahiaruhi on foot, I don't think I have told you the meaning of Ahiaruhi; it is derived from the Maori words Ahi meaning fire and aruhi meaning foot.

After staying for five days at his brother's run Fred made his way to Castlepoint which was "always a hospitable place" After resting there 3 days he made his way to via Ahau, Waipukurau, Pa and Waituki, the first residence of Mr. H. Tiffen on the Homewood Waituki on the banks of the Tuki - Tuki river was a convenient spot for a residence. Stores and other commodities could be landed there by canoe from Napier at that time as Ahuriri. and the wool taken back by the same way. This required balancing if the wool wasn't to get wet, otherwise it would mean going all the way to dry it out and repack it, a job calculated to try the patience of any man. Fred Tiffen loved tramping and a change of scenery, so he made many journeys. On one he set out from Waituki for Wellington met Mr. J.D. Canning at Eparima and turned with him, making their way to Canning and Hatdings station between Waipukurau and Mt. Vernon, to help cook. Fred said, "Grinding wheat into flour was a job for 7 or 8 mouths".

When he went on to build a whare for Mr. F.S. Abbott of Waipawa living in a tent for months at the back of the run. His next move was back to Waituki now Witherows, as for a short time while his brother was on a visit to Wellington. He took to the road as soon as Mr. H. Tiffen returned, this time to get spirits of tar and damaged tobacco for dressing.

On his return from another visit to Wellington he helped as top sawyer to cut timber and a woolshed at Parangata, I suppose that being top sawyer was a better job than the man in the pit.

Earthquakes seem to have been more frequent then than now as Fred Tiffen records many in his diary, so perhaps the earth is settling down.

Once Fred got lost on one of his many treks to Wellington. He was caught in a storm and a sleet on the hills overlooking the Warehama river. He camped in a flax bush, which seems to have provided good cover in those days from the weather, when it cleared he went to take his bearings.

When he returned to Homewood and found Purvis Russell trespassing by cutting timber in the bush, which was part of Homewood and owned by the Hon. A.G. Tollemache, Henry Tiffen was in England.

It is difficult to imagine that from Waipawa to Waipukurau was once all forest, a small part still remains on the north side of the river Tuki - Tuki at Waipukurau. According to an old map in my possession there was once a bush tramway system operating close to the river, passing thro' Purvis Russell's property, to Waipukurau, between J. Hardings and the Farewa bush to Waipawa on to Kaikora now Otane, through and out at the side of Te Aute, which was quite a long track and I suppose carried timber cut in the bush country it passed thro'.

However to get back to my story. Fred went to Napier to see Commissioner Dommett about the trespass. Whatever the outcome of this was Fred wasn't taking it lying down. He "Stopped Purvis Russell's sawing by levering a log off into the saw pit" and no doubt felt very pleased with himself. Nowadays a trip to Wellington means a few hours in comfort, but in the early days, even if a schooner was available it took 7 days and was considered good going. There was only the most primitive means of transport, no roads and not half a mile of roadway.

When wool was taken by canoe to Waipureke the Maoris did the job at a cost of £3/10/- per bale. Later a punt was used with headquarters at Patangata. Up to now Fred had not harmed life, considering his adventures but misfortune caught up on him when his "Boots" thre him and bolted, breaking his arm. Fred was on his way home from Waipureke when the accident occurred. Now in those days it wasn't a case of telephoning the Dr. and "he's here!" he was there. The nearest Dr. was quite a distance away and it would take some time to reach his Patient. So young Fred had to walk back to Waipureke to intercept a companion getting him to fetch Dr. Hitchings from Napier, to render first aid. When this was done Fred was taken by a flat bottomed boat belonging to a man named Hollins, who took him to a small refreshment and Fred said "sly grog shop" near Awaroro to Mun's Royal Hotel in Napier. It was thirteen days before Fred was fit to return home but even this accident didn't cure him of the wanderlust. In 1858 Fred Tiffen was appointed Inspector of sheep and brands at a salary of £100 a year. This gave him plenty of scope for his love of travel.

His next visit Fred Paid of Wellington was once of great importance. He'd decided to marry in "double harness" so on Jan 17th 1859 he married the lady of his choice, who was 20 years of age.

Fred Tiffen and his bride returned to live for a time at Gwavas, where Fred was then a Manager at the time of his marriage. He left there for homewood on Jan 26th 1860 - taking his goods from there by packhorse to Elmshill where they lived in a whare until a house was built all of hand sawn timber. You'd have thought being married would've cured Fred of his love of wandering, not a bit of it, he just took his wife along with him. In 1862 his daughter was born. Before this happy event took place Fred Tiffen was appointed in 1861, returning Officer of the Waimarama District where he conducted two sessions of members of the Provincial Council.

Fred's duties took him away from home a great deal and he spent much of his time on the tour. On one occasion he had to conduct an election at Porangahau and such a lack of enthusiasm shown only one Elector was present. The election was therefore postponed for three weeks when Mr. J.D. Ormond was elected.

Some of the Laws passed in the early days of the settlement of New Zealand were very different from those operating today. One law which has since been greatly altered was to cause Fred Tiffin and a neighbour a good deal of trouble. Fred wasn't a man to be trifled with and woe betide anyone who tried to trespass on his rights, as Mr Chapman his neighbour found to his cost.

Some sheep belonging to Mr. Chapman had strayed among Fred Tiffin's flock. Fred impounded them in his own pens as well as some working bullocks, this was the legal then. He claimed 9/- costs 24/- impoundage and 5/- for the bullocks. This brought Mr Chapman and a station hand to the rescue of his stock.

He set about Mr. Tiffin with his whip handle. Fred wasn't taking this lightly, so he returned it all with interest - using a spade. His assailant led him to the ground nearly throttling him and by the time the contest had ended the place looked like a slaughter house. They both set out to Waipawa, Took summons out against each other and were bound over to keep the peace, which didn't last long with two such hotheads.

Mr. Chapman owned a slut with her pups and she attacked Mr. Tiffin's sheep. Fred followed (them) and got a shot at them. He then made his way to Edanham station and as Mr. Chapman was ill in Napier, he reported his grievance to the Station Manager, getting Peter Hart to return with him to see the damage done. Fred retaliated by impounding 115 sheep belonging to Mr. Chapman. These were valued for £2/6/2. Fred then summoned Mr. Chapman for damages serving a subpoena on Peter Hart at the same time.

Fred said the whole trouble was based on Mr. Chapman mustering "My sheep under a magistrate's order just to suit him" however the whole miserable business cost him his position as Inspector of sheep and brands. He was offered a sub-Inspectorship under Mr. G. Peacock which he refused to accept. Fred remarks that agitation was floated by the meddlesome Lord Henry Russell, causing a great deal of private and public correspondence". The whole trouble seems to have stemmed from the previous assault cases however there couldn't have been any lasting feeling between the two men as Mr. Tiffin became one of the Mr. Chapman's executors of his will when he died.

Peter Hart who figured in these disputes came to a very tragic end while working on day. A branch of a tree fell on him inflicting such injuries that he died 9 hours later. As I've mentioned before, it took some time for a Dr. to reach his patient and Dr. Todd Coroner of Waipawa arrived in time to sign the necessary papers and poor Peter was duly buried the next day, his grave being left in case his father arrived the following day.

Some very dry seasons were experienced in Hawked Bay in the early days. Fred Tiffin mentions many such in his diary, one in particular. In April the first rain fell since the previous August, The Waipawa river was quite full for three or four miles above the gorge!

Once Fred attended a Government land sale and purchased he said "A so called block of 50 acres at 5/0 $\frac{1}{2}$ an acre", W.B. Rhodes forcing me to buy or he would do so. The block was found to contain 100 acres less than stated, 50 acres at 10/- was returned to me later on as compensation".

wasn't above admitting himself in the wrong either-he proceeded against Morris ia and R and W. Riddle under the scab act. He reports "Believe I was in error great was his excitement when he discovered the first Scotch thistle on the ll property-perhaps it was the fore runner of all those we see today.

Don't imagine that life held nothing but work for these early Settlers, managed to get quite a lot of fun one way and another. They attended many s and travelled long distances to various station. They had their pig ng too and it seems to have been a more profitable sport than it is today.
Tiffin tells us of the shooting of 134 wild pigs. Duck shooting too was n to turn our present day Sportsmen green with envy, a total of 122 ducks bagged in one day on Fred's lake at Elmshill. Good going wasn't it?

I'm not sure if Fred Tiffin was responsible for introducing the first pheasants akes Bay but he tells us that he liberated one cock and two hen pheasants from r, so perhaps he was.

Here too we told that Ditton's dray was the first wheeled vehicle to pass the Oero bush road and that the first boiling down of sheep for tallow place in 1871. The Warranga and Hoani killing plant consisted of a 400 gallon tank and 40 wethers were used at a boil. Interesting isn't it? And interesting still was the population of Hawkes Bay some years previously, 1864 exact, was 3,770 of which 1,337 lived in Napier, so even in the early days that has enjoyed a popularity second to none in New Zealand. Fred Tiffin would doubt be a very proud man if he could see the wonderful progress it has made,
People were ready and willing to share with others too, one instance of this osity was when each sheep station contributed a few sheep each to help support Te Aute school.

Fred's experience as a Trooper and gold escort in Australia came in useful g the Maori disturbances in the early 19th century. A Militia meeting was in Mr. E.S. Curtings wool shed. Altho' the meeting lapsed for want of ence drills commenced with Fred Tiffin as Corporal and acting Sergeant.
were served out and drilling continued for some time. once, Fred was called e a court of enquiry for not attending drill parades regularly at Waitaka drill ground as sentenced to 48 hours detention at Waipwa court-house. Of course they held ing matches much as we do today and so were able to keep in touch with the f fire arms.

Fred went to Wairoa once on one of his runs "Hunting excursions". He walked to 's Liston station with a view to purchase, he was tormented by more fleas than er knew existed. His only remark was FLEAS!!!! but he doesn't tell us if he t the property with it's additional livestock.

Fred served on several Juries. Once when a case was brought to court with as Defendant, the verdict went in favour of the Plaintiffs, because Fred's as was too drunk to attend.

He also served on the special Jury which sat on the case, Kennedy (Telegraph epers v Carlyle and others (Hawkes Bay Herald) so stubborn was Fred he tells elf held out against the nine Jurors until lapse of the three hours limit" er he sat on a Grand Jury and he described it as a "farce".

Fred Tiffin lived a great deal in Napier which held a charm for him, through latter part of his life. His first home was in Clive Square and altho' he went to Elmshill on business he always returned to Napier. All the same Fred liked change and he let his Clive Square residence to the Working mens' club on the option of purchase later. He spent another four years living in Clyde Road. He auctioned that and returned to Elmshill for a time but the call of Napier was strong and he returned to live in Station street when his house was built.

Then Fred tells us of the great eruption of the Tarawera mountains on June 10th at 2.15 P.M. when New Zealand lost one of her most beautiful scenic attractions, the pink and white terraces. He mentions too the great fire at Napier when 23 houses were destroyed, also the laying of the foundation stone of the Napier breakwater on the 27th 1887. What a wonderful fund of interesting information those old men had! I wonder if they ever thought of the time when their exploits would be of National and historic importance.

Fred paid another visit to Australia but this time he had his wife and two children with him. They arrived in Sydney in the middle of a strike, stayed at Patonga a week and arrived back in Auckland during another strike. What a great sufferer Fred was. His brother, Henry Stokes Tiffin, died on Feb 21st 1896. This was a great loss of Fred, indeed the year seems to have been one of misadventures, he records great bush fires raging and Puha homestead destroyed. On the Friday of the following year there was heavy floods and loss of life at the Mangi washout as well as earthquakes. Life was full of trials and tribulation (t it?

To add to Fred's troubles his Elmshill Homestead was completely destroyed by fire, fortunately his wife and family were in Napier and only Fred, his son Mr. W.E. Grieves were in the house, they all managed to escape without injury. The house was rebuilt and ready for occupation in two months which must be a record. Building Oh! and here is a tit bit that may be of interest to Farmers of today. At the Colonial Wool Sale London in 1901 Wool sold at fourpence a pound!

Fred's troubles were by no means over, he received the disturbing news of a landslide which occurred at Te Rata when his son's house was swept away with almost fatal results to Fred Jr. but a Mrs Merrit wasn't so fortunate, she received such severe injuries that her leg had to be amputated.

Despite all the troubles Fred Tiffin managed to enjoy the thrill now and then as when he had his first ride in a motor car, later he tells us it took him an hour and a half to get Napier from Patonga, so you see we have hurried things up since 1907.

Then came the greatest trouble of Fred's long life. His wife and Partner taken seriously ill, she lingered on for nearly three years when she died and now lies in the Napier cemetery-but before her last illness, Fred became seriously ill himself when on a visit to Featherston in bitterly cold weather, He caught such a severe chill that he caused his family a great deal of worry, but Fred was tough and was able to take his first walk to town at the end of six weeks which pleased him immensely. It is very interesting to note how Fred kept in touch with the various members of his family altho' they were scattered all over New Zealand. He seemed to have his fingers, not only as to the whereabouts of his family but on events of interest. For instance he tells us that Queen Victoria died on Jan 22nd 1901 and that King Edward VII's Coronation was on August the 9th. of the same year ending his entry with "Coronation - God save the King".

Almost at the end of a life of hard work and travel Fred paid a visit to an old friend who lived at Waikanae. Henry Burling was at that time 107 years of age. He was, in his younger days, a mail carrier and well known in the Otaki district.

His life was hard and in many ways very primitive people lived to a good old age. Henry Burling is an example, he died at the age of 110 years. Fred Tiffin's diary queries this but I have since ascertains that that was Henry Burling's exact age when he died. Any way it speaks well for a life of hard work plus exertions as an inducement to longevity. The last record Fred made of his age in his diary was in 1911 when he celebrated his 83rd birthday. Despite his age Fred still seemed to enjoy life keeping a track of events which are of great interest to many of us who have never known the trials and tribulations which beset the lives of our forefathers.
