WORLD WAR II ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE

Sad memories of war live on TUESDAY, August 15, is the 50th anniversary of one of the true landmarks of the 20th Century — the surrender of Japan and with it, the end of World War II.

It ended six long years of waiting and towns and cities the length of New Zealand erupted with joy as the announcement of peace came over the radio.

But the Victory over Japan Day celebrations were tinged with the sad realisation that things could never return to normal for the many families who lost loved ones.

New Zealand was a small country still establishing itself on the very edge of the world when war broke out, its population just half that of today. But we committed ourselves wholeheartedly — and suffered a heavy toll, heavier proportionately than our allies.

It is a toll still endured today — by the widows who lost husbands; and by their descendants who have grown up without fathers and grandfathers.

Some 11,921 New Zealanders gave their lives in theatres of war — in Europe; in north Africa; in the Pacific. They perished on land, at sea, and in the air.

This publication is a tribute to those people. We publish it not as a glorification of war, but in memory of the individuals.

The concept of life during wartime is vague to many people in New Zealand today.

The ranks of those who do remember are thinning with every passing year. It has been encouraging to see the numbers of young people at Anzac Day ceremonies increasing in recent years — a hopeful sign of renewed interest, understanding and appreciation of the sacrifices of our forebears.

We hope that this tribute assists that process — and that we will, indeed, remember them.

The names were provided by New Zealand Defence from its data base which forms the basis of the "Tears on Greenstone — Roimata Pounamu" memorial at the Queen Elizabeth II Army Memorial Museum, Waiouru.

A thin veil of water continuously flows down the centre of the wall, symbolising tears, and cleansing and healing.

The names of more than 30,000 men and women who have died in the service of their country are to be continuously intoned in a space formed by the Memorial Wall — the tape is currently up to the letter "d".

When the tape is completed it will take about three weeks for the names to be read from first to last.

Visitors can also push a button to hear the name of their choice which will be inserted in the list, before the tape returns to its original order. Names are also available on display from a computer database.

Printed certificates giving details of relatives will also be available to visitors within a month.

Greenstone or Pounamu was chosen for the memorial because of its special significance to both Maori and pakeha, representing life, death and the environment.

Six years of burden

EVEN though New Zealand was not territorially involved in World War II, the events of that time had an enormous impact on the lives of all New Zealanders who lived through those years.

Indeed, the consequences were evident for many years, even decades, after the cessation of hostilities. Rationing of food, clothing and petrol continued as part of New Zealand's contribution to Britain's recovery. The terrible losses suffered by the Maori Battalion have affected the strength of Maori leadership up to the present time. The personal consequences of bereavement, injury and illness are all burdens that have continued to be borne by many service men and women and their families. But 50 years ago, after six terrible years of war, most New Zealanders could begin to think once more about normal life. Instead of war, our attention here could again be given to family, home and peace.

The Depression had just been easing when the war came, so it was already a time of lost years and frustrated hopes. The coming of the war meant that instead of rebuilding, New Zealanders had to face further deprivation, the departure of thousands of men, and great upheaval in the way we lived our lives.

After each battle was over, another casualty list would be released. More young New Zealanders had been killed, or wounded, or were missing in action. There were other casualties, here at home — the children growing up with no knowledge of their fathers; the mothers who had to struggle to raise their families alone; the returned men and women harbouring their memories of boredom, horror, of loss and of wasted years.

So only in a literal sense is this a mere list of names on paper. It is also a memorial for everyone and everything we lost, a half-century ago. We remember them, with respect, sadness and abiding gratitude and with a determination that such a war must never happen again.

Dame Catherine Tizard
GCMG, DBE,
Governor-General of New Zealand

Reminder of sacrifice

THE commemorative events of the last 12 months have served as stark reminders to us all of the sacrifice and courage of New Zealanders during the terrible world-wide conflict of 50 years ago. Anniversaries are just that, opportunities to step back from the demands of daily life and reflect on the events of the past.

As Prime Minister I have been proud to represent our country at commemoration services from the Normandy invasion and Victory in Europe celebrations to a memorial for the remarkable hero, Charles Upham, VC and Bar at St Martin-in-the-Fields in London.

Now, here at home, we celebrate the achievement of peace in the Pacific and the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II.

Those awful years between 1940 and 1945 strained the fabric of civilisation. The strength of those who prevailed against oppression stands as a tribute to the human condition.

Today we remind ourselves again of the initiative, the humour, the strength of character and the courage of the Kiwis that became the stuff of legend. We remember too the sacrifice and loss of those at home.

Every family, every community was affected by the storm of war. Our society and our future was redefined and the New Zealand servicemen and women who returned helped to forge a country with an identity very different from its colonial past.

Perhaps only those who were truly a part of the conflict can really understand the trauma of battle and the pain of loss in war.

But I believe it is beholden on all of us, and perhaps more particularly the younger generation, to both understand and pay tribute.

A new generation now honours those who kept the light of freedom burning in those dark days. We honour too those who came to this country from a devastated Europe to add to the cultural mix in a revitalised country.

Perhaps more importantly though, this anniversary gives us the opportunity to think again about the reasons for the sacrifice and pledge our nation to work always in the process of peace.

homes and families of over 30,000 men and women who have died in the service of their country over the last 150 years.

In memory of these brave men and women, we have built a Greenstone Wall at the entrance of the Museum. Along with the sound of running water, their names are continuously intoned. Included in the names are those from the Airforce, Navy and Merchant Marine, as recognition of the great contribution the other services made to the N.Z. Army through the years.

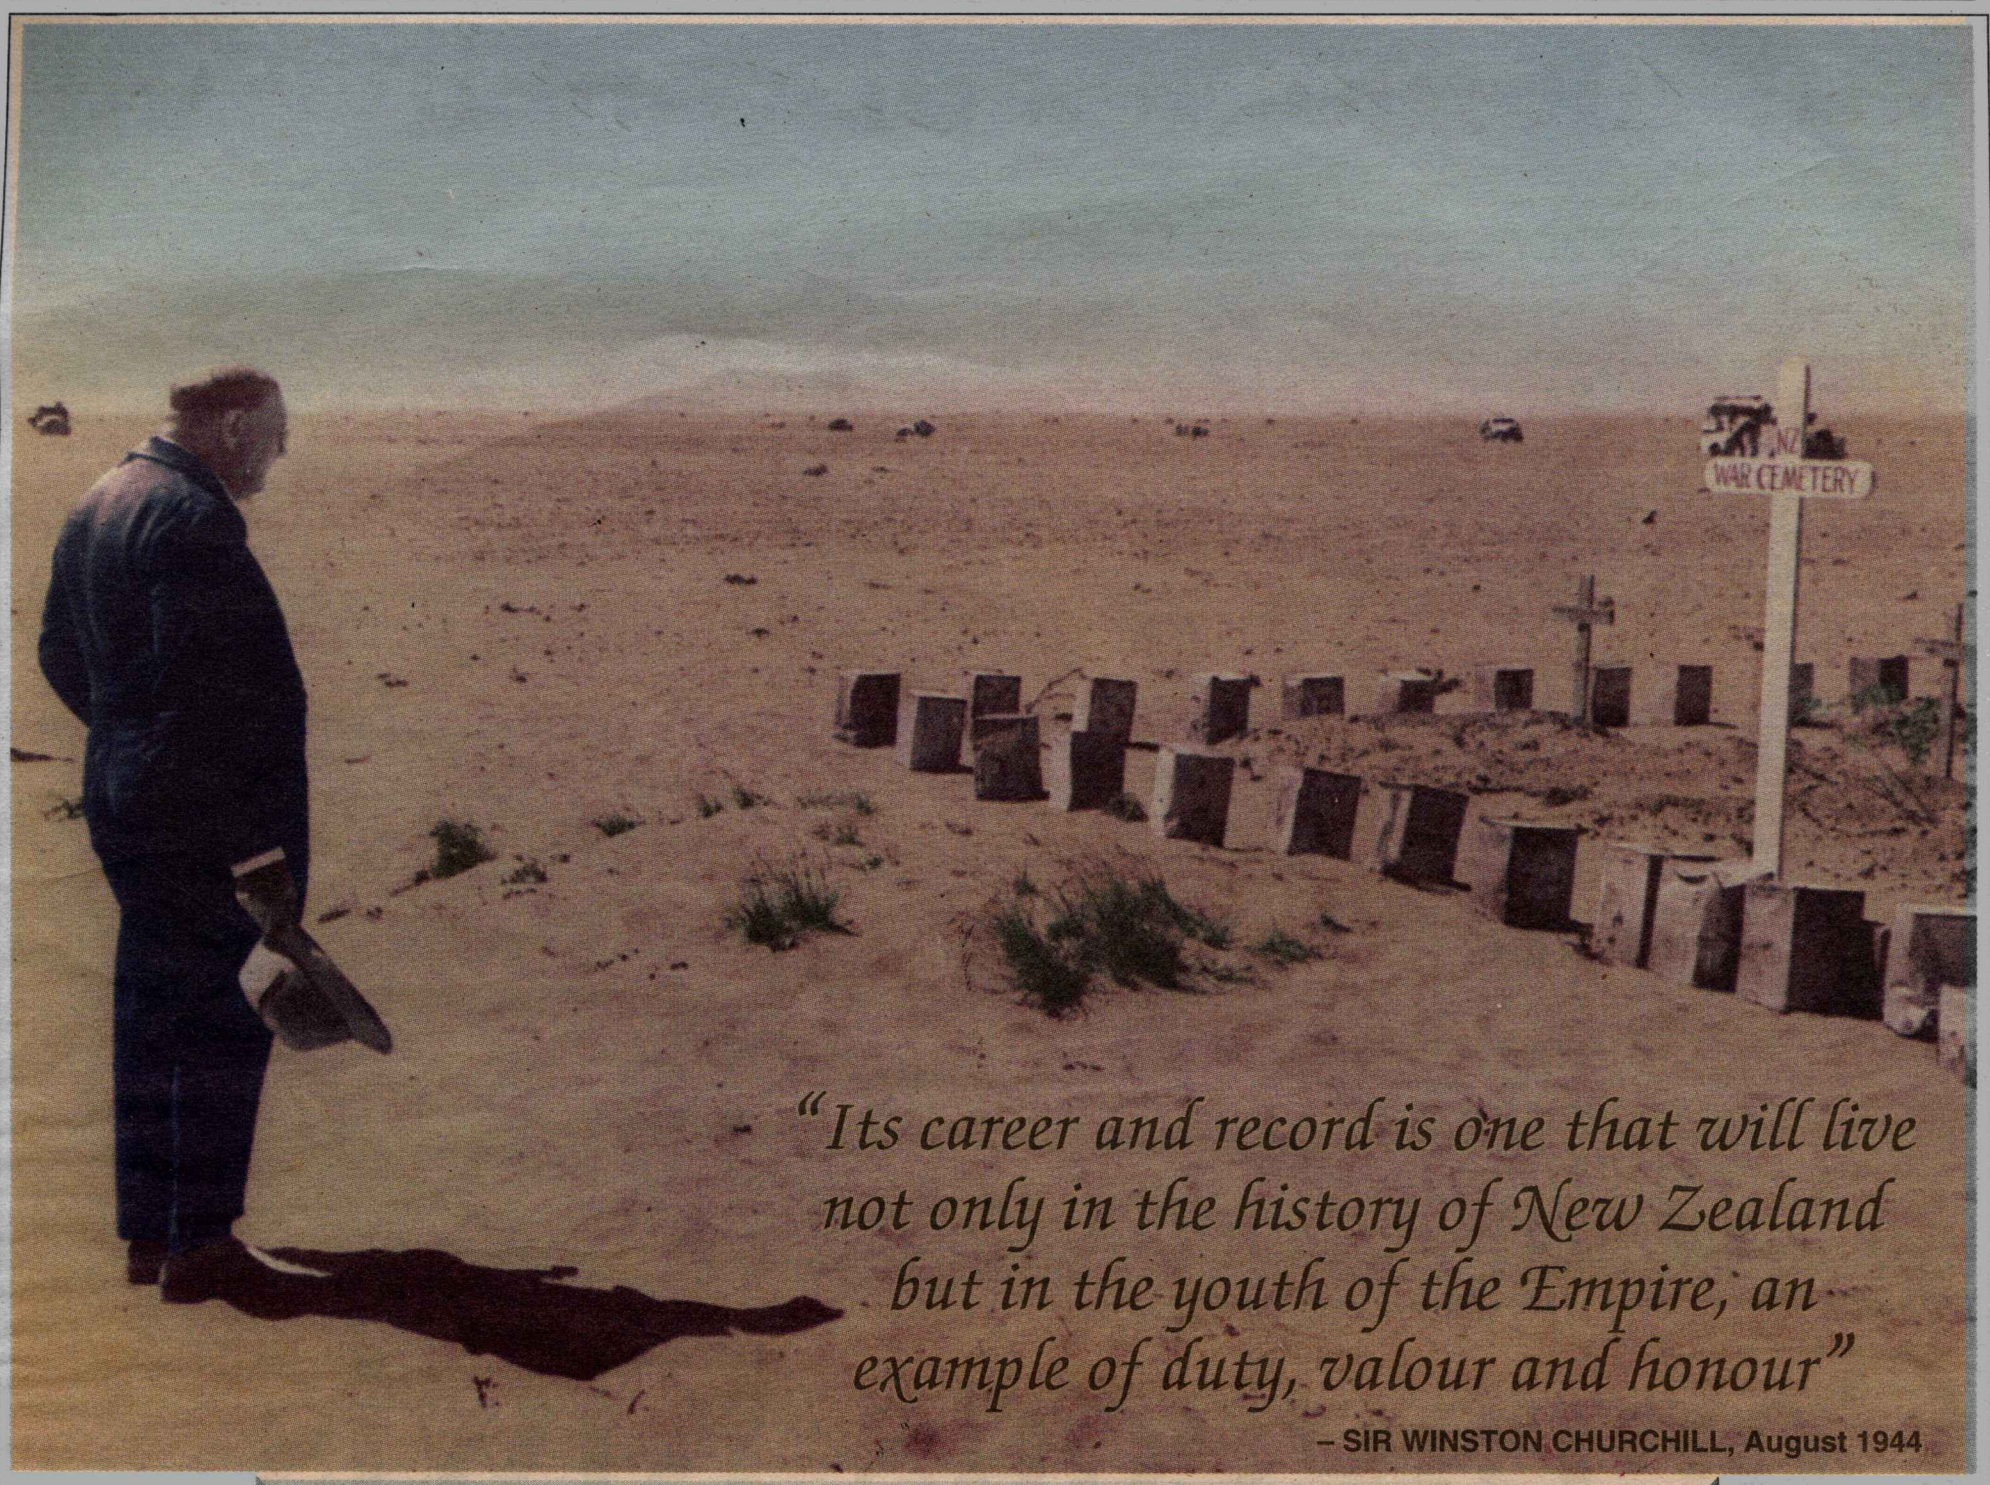
WORLD WAR II ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE



"Its career and record is one that will live not only in the history of New Zealand but in the youth of the Empire, an example of duty, valour and honour"

– SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL, August 1944

OUR FALLEN HEROES

■ Tiny New Zealand made one of the biggest sacrifices per head of population in World War II. LESLIE WATKINS looks at some of the heroes

GERMAN submariners were so astounded by the tenacity and courage of a New Zealand pilot who destroyed their U-boat that their evidence won him the Victoria Cross.

It was a posthumous award. Flying Officer Lloyd Trigg, a 27-year-old pre-war salesman from Houhora, died with his crew when their blazing Liberator crashed into the Atlantic off West Africa.

Seven survivors from the U-boat were later picked up by a Royal Navy corvette — safe in a dinghy which had drifted from the wreckage of the Liberator.

The sacrifice made on that August day in 1943 by Trigg — married with two young sons — mirrored that of so many of the 135,000 Kiwi men and women who served overseas during World War II. Nearly 12,000 of them were killed.

The decisive impact made by Kiwis in every aspect of that war, recognised by our enemies as well as our allies, was all the more surprising because of the size of our population — just a little over 1,600,000 on September 3, 1939, when we joined Britain in declaring war on Germany.

Winston Churchill acknowledged New Zealand's appalling losses in his memoirs. The death rate for people from England was one in 165 by January 31, 1945 — including those killed during the blitzes. The New Zealand rate was one in 175.

TRIGG . . . courageous

BARRON . . . pushed luck

The other Dominions averaged one in 372 and the USA one in 775.

Londoners would have suffered far more carnage — and, indeed, the war might well have been lost — if it had not been for the fighter squadrons headed by New Zealander Air Marshal Sir Keith Park.

He commanded the Spitfire and Hurricanes of Number 11 Group Fighter Command which, against all apparent odds, won the Battle of Britain.

Park also commanded fighter cover during the evacuation of Dunkirk.

The Allies had reason to be grateful to so many fliers from New Zealand. More than 2000 of the 55,000 airmen who died in the RAF's Bomber Command were from this country.

In 1942, 55 Kiwis joined the Command's elite Pathfinder force which went ahead of the main force to pinpoint targets — and which attracted the heaviest flak and the most intensive fighter attacks.

One of the most memorable of those Pathfinder pilots was J. Fraser Barron from Maheno in North Otago. He had set his heart on being a flier while at Waitaki Boys' High School and eventually, because of his youth, became known in the RNZAF as the Boy Wing Commander.

The average survival expectancy for Bomber Command aircrew then was about 12 missions but Barron, who won the DSO and bar, DFC and DFM, typified those who pushed their luck to the limit and beyond.

Each of his 79 operations involved immense danger. In one operation in appalling weather he was flying one of the first four-engined aircraft, a Stirling, to raid the factories of the Ruhr when, long before they reached the target, their bomb circuit was wrecked by flak. This made it impossible to release the 5000 pounds of bombs in the bomb-racks. Only those under the wings could be dropped.

On the flight back to Britain, deteriorating weather forced Barron to detour hundreds of miles. The added distance, combined with the load of bombs, created anxieties over fuel. Over the Channel Isles he discovered that he had enough left for only 10 more minutes' flying.

Three of his engines cut out as he landed — without time for the customary circuit — at the first airport on the south coast of England.

Every drop of fuel had gone. The flight had lasted nine hours and ten minutes.

One minute or so more could have brought disaster.

In one of his letters home Barron said he thought "they had me" on more than one occasion and he described his admiration for his crew — "the most wonderful chaps in the world".

He wrote: "The only thing I was frightened of was that some day I might let them down and not be able to bring them home."

That letter was dated March 6, 1944. He and his crew died on his 79th operation on May 19, 1944. It is believed their plane collided with another during an attack on the marshalling yards of Le Mans. He was 23.

Flying Officer Trigg was a pilot in the same mould.

On August 11, 1943, two months after winning the DFC for his attacks on submarines which were hounding merchant ships off West Africa, he took off from Morocco in his Liberator "D for Dog". From 900 feet up he spotted a submarine, U-468, on the surface and immediately dropped to 50 feet and attacked. U-468 had no time to crash-dive.

Frantic machine-gun and shell fire from the submarine peppered D for Dog which burst into flames from nose to tail.

"It was a critical moment," said the eventual VC citation. "Flying Officer Trigg could have broken off the engagement and made a forced landing in the sea."

By now Trigg was almost certainly severely wounded. His plane, flying in a straight line and an easy target, was being smashed by more and more shells. But he held his course and, before crashing into the Atlantic, he released eight 250-pound depth charges. They sank U-468.

During the Battle of the Atlantic, New Zealand airmen were involved in the destruction of more than 20 U-boats.

Undeterred by intense mortar and machine-gun fire, Second Lieutenant Moananui-a-Kiwa Ngarimu (left) led his platoon up the steep, rocky climb and personally destroyed at least two machine-gun posts. He was shot in the shoulder during hand-to-hand bayonet fighting but, despite the urgings of senior officers, refused to go for treatment to a first-aid post. He could not spare the time

Another New Zealander to win the VC in astonishing circumstances was Second Lieutenant Moananui-a-Kiwa Ngarimu of the Maori Battalion.

Before the war he was a shepherd on his father's farm near Ruatoria.

When Rommel's Afrika Korps were being pushed back through North Africa by the 8th Army in March 1943, the Maori Battalion was ordered to capture strongly defended hills which dominated a pass called Tebaga Gap.

Undeterred by intense mortar and machine-gun fire, Ngarimu led his platoon up the steep, rocky climb and personally destroyed at least two machine-gun posts. He was shot in the shoulder during hand-to-hand bayonet fighting but, despite the urgings of senior officers, refused to go for treatment to a first-aid post. He could not spare the time.

Inspired by Ngarimu, one observer commented, the Maoris no longer regarded themselves as officers, NCOs and other ranks. They were all men of the Ngati Porou, fighting alongside the spirits of their ancestors, to defend the honour of the tribe.

LAST SHOT . . . the HMNZS Gambia

Ngarimu was again wounded, this time in the leg, but still insisted on going ahead of his men — only two of whom were now not wounded. Unable to find grenades at one stage, he threw rocks at the Germans. The Germans mistook them for grenades and retreated even faster.

He was still firing his tommy gun from the hip when he was shot dead.

In honour of Second Lieutenant Ngarimu and his platoon, the battlefield was named after a place which he loved and where he had so often tended his father's sheep. It is still called Hikurangi.

This week's 50th anniversary of the end of World War II brings particularly vivid memories for 81-year-old Aucklander Jim Wilson.

He was a petty officer on HMNZS Gambia which was credited with firing the last shot against the Japanese mainland and which represented New Zealand at Japan's surrender in Tokyo.

"Orders had been given to the Japanese that every fortified position had to fly a white flag," he says. "As we steamed into Tokyo Harbour it looked like a field of daisies but suddenly a kamikaze pilot was coming straight at us. An American fighter chasing him shot him down into the sea just behind us. Just one more life wasted."

WORLD WAR II ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE

We will remember them

WORLD WAR II claimed the lives of 11,921 New Zealanders. This little country paid a far greater price than many others on a population basis.

New Zealand's casualty rate of 24 per 1000 people compared with nine per 1000 for Canada and 13 per 1000 for Australia.

In addition 15,749 of them were wounded, 8469 were taken prisoner and 46 went missing.

We spent 31% of our national income on the war effort — or £500 million, equivalent to $25.7 billion in today's terms. In comparison, Canada and Australia spent 29% and 24% in the United States.

Today, we publish the list of New Zealand war dead in World War II. It has been taken from the Roll of Honour produced by New Zealand Defence Force for the Tears on Greenstone memorial at the Army Museum in Waiouru.

The list gives the person's name, rank, decorations if any, military group, place and date of death, and age.

VJ DAY, August 15, 1945

Peace and Noise

CELEBRATION TIME ... (clockwise from left) June Scannell and companions party on two wheels in Christchurch; Streamers and smackers in Wellington; Flag-waving revellers join in the fun; Marjorie Bennett in Auckland's confetti-covered Queen St. Main photo from the John Pasco collection, Alexander Turnbull Library

AT 11am on Wednesday, August 15, 1945, thousands of New Zealanders gathered around their radios to hear British Prime Minister Clement Atlee announce that Japan had surrendered; World War II was over.

It ended, as New Zealand's own Prime Minister Peter Fraser went on to say, "six long, arduous, worrying, dangerous, tragic years". Not that many people heard Mr Fraser.

Mr Atlee had scarcely finished his first sentence before the celebrations began.

Immediately the news was spread in a cacophony of fire, factory and ships sirens; bells; railway engines; car horns and whistles — "a lusty chorus of jubilation" as Wellington's Evening Post called it.

Excited crowds ready to let loose years of pent-up emotion spilled from factories, offices, shops and homes in every town and city.

The telephone exchange was overloaded for long periods as families and friends rang each other to share their joy.

A previously decided two-day public holiday began immediately.

"Within five minutes, the main streets were a seething mass of cheering, shouting, singing people, many equipped as if by magic with flags, whistles, rattles, paper hats and streamers," the Press Association reported.

'When we heard that the war had ended we just closed the office and the girls all hurried out into the street'

Marjorie Bennett was typical.

She was a 20-year-old shorthand typist for a Huntly colliery, working in Endeans Buildings, Queen St, when the news was announced.

"When we heard that the war had ended we just closed the office and the girls all hurried out into the street. The excitement was intense, I'll never forget it.

"The girl who was standing behind me, her husband was overseas so it was doubly exciting for her."

One of her vivid memories of the war years was the American servicemen in the city. "We always felt terribly for them. They had nothing to do and they seemed terribly lonely."

Marjorie (now Marjorie Brown), has three children and lives in the Meadowbank, Auckland, house that has been home for 45 years.

In Dunedin, more than 15,000 people thronged the Octagon in one of the most impressive ceremonies in the city's history.

Around 300 bandsmen and 1500 choristers played and sang anthems and hymns, while later in the evening, 2000 people gathered near the Catholic Youth Centre for modern and old-time dancing — "a form of diversion common enough in other parts of the world, and not unknown in such parts of New Zealand as Napier and Hamilton, but seldom exploited in Dunedin" as the Otago Daily Times reported the following morning.

In Christchurch, as everywhere, buildings were bedecked with flags and bunting. By early afternoon, thousands had made their way to Cathedral Square.

The Press noted: "A piano on a platform was punished for some time in vain efforts to make it heard while some revellers on the platform performed hakas and others danced. Victory 'champagne' was freely offered by the many who bore familiar brown quart bottles, and the offers were as freely accepted.

"Groups of young men and women meandered about in novelty hats and several flag-bedecked cars and one motorcycle carrying four passengers made circuits of the populated area."

Included on the motorcycle was June Smith, an industrial chemist at Aulsebrooks, in Christchurch.

Now June Scannell, and living in Raumati Beach on the Kapiti Coast, she is visiting her eldest daughter in Monroe, Connecticut. From there she told the Sunday Star-Times: "My flat mates and I heard the stunning news over the radio on 3ZB and decided to go to Cathedral Square to see what, if anything, was happening.

"As the crowds gathered the celebrations soon took off. The singing, dancing and flag waving intensified to an all-time high and a feeling of carefree exuberance was the order of the day.

"We joined in after a sherry or two at the United Service Hotel in the Square. I happened to spot three Air Force friends on a motor-bike and decided to join them in the revelry. The four of us were really caught up in the wonderful and exhilarating madcap jollity. We managed to complete several circuits of the square before some pleasant cops finally put a stop to our victory ride."

One of the riders was Roly Hammond, of Tauranga, who said he was on weekend leave from his RNZAF posting at Wigram. He said another was an air force officer, Peter Kennedy, who later became a doctor and has since died.

Sitting behind June Smith was the owner of the motorbike, Derek Cunningham-Blank, who later emigrated to the United States and was for years a company executive in California.

Mr Hammond set up a giftware business after the war and now lives in retirement in Tauranga, where he is vice-president of the Matua Bowling Club.

Some 6000 people attended a thanksgiving and dedication service at Lancaster Park that afternoon. And the following day, a crowd described as the largest to have ever assembled in Christchurch — and possibly New Zealand — joined a victory procession to North Hagley Park.

In Wellington, bands played on the balcony of a Willis St hotel while the crowds massed and sang below. Scenes of wild jubilation were reported in Manners and Lower Cuba Streets.

In the evening, most activity was centred on Victory Corner — the junction of Featherston and Hunter Streets where hundreds of young and old danced together.

"Youth was much to the fore," the next morning's Dominion recorded, "with groups of boys encircling girls who submitted not too unwillingly to kisses."

Women's Royal Army Corps national president Joyce Bennett was working at a Wellington camp, helping with the recuperation and rehabilitation of POWs returning from Hong Kong.

"Everyone was so excited and jubilant to think we had won our freedom and that the war was finally over.

"We were given two days off to celebrate in the capital and everyone danced, drank and sang in the streets. After six long years, it was so hard to believe that it was all over.

In Dunedin, more than 15,000 people thronged the Octagon in one of the most impressive ceremonies seen

"Shops were closed and it was difficult to get anything to eat because everyone was partying — all the hotels were open though! It was good to get back to camp for a bite to eat!"

An Auckland Star reporter joined a tram ride from the suburbs to the city on that historic VJ Day morning, observing:

"The sudden bursting in of a group of of work-freed factory girls was the first cluster of stars to twinkle the brain in rhapsody and it grew and grew until youth, uninhibited, in the person of a flock of schoolboys equipped with trumpets took possession to lift that quiet tram-load to bursting smiles and excited talk.

"And then, as the tram entered Queen St, it was in the midst of merriment. All was aglow. All was rapturous. All was good-fellowship. All was noise, and movement, and waving colours . . . and more noise.

"The Coney Island whirl of the city was infectious, all-enveloping.

"Auckland was celebrating with a will".

Former Governor-General, Sir David Beattie, was serving aboard HMNZS Kiwi, minesweeping an area between Great Barrier Island and the Hen and Chickens group on VJ Day.

"We received a signal to 'splice the mainbrace' which meant a special tot of rum was available to all. It was certainly a relief to know the war against Japan was over".

New Zealand's only surviving VC, Jack Hinton, had been released from his POW camp in Germany after his capture in Greece.

"I was in Christchurch when the war in Japan ended, and I thought what a terrible waste it had all been. All those thousands of lives which had been cut short so horribly just because some lunatic had wanted to rule the world."

Broadcaster Selwyn Toogood was in Florence when news of the Japanese surrender came through on BBC radio. "It was with a sense of great relief to all of us that war had finished."

At the time he was a major with the 2nd New Zealand Division, which had been preparing to invade Japan. With the news the war was over, many from the division went as part of the occupation force instead. Mr Toogood stayed on in Italy and returned home in February, 1946.

A Dambusters raid hero, Les Munro, now Mayor of Waitomo District, was on leave in London when VJ Day arrived.

"By coincidence, I had also been in London on leave when the end of the war in Europe was announced. As happened on May 8, there was a tremendous feeling of relief that, at last, after just on six years of world-wide conflict, it was all over; the forces of democracy had prevailed.

"Compared with many, I had a good war. I survived some close shaves and came through the war largely unaffected by my experiences. Like all others who served, I learned true discipline and the belief and self-confidence in oneself.

"What did we achieve, all those who served in the war? We certainly saved the world from dictatorship in the broadest sense —

Europe from Hitler and Nazism; the Middle East from Mussolini and Fascism; and the Pacific from Japanese Imperialism.

"But if you look at the various regional conflicts that have occurred since, one must ask the question: Has mankind learned a lesson from World War II?"

For 19-year-old Eva Howitt, VJ-Day dawned as she was sitting in her room at the nurses' home at Auckland Hospital. "I was wondering if my sore throat had anything to do with me working in the scarlet fever ward," she recalls.

"The war was over, the nurses on the floor were running from room to room yelling and screaming the good news. So was I until suddenly I thought 'The telegram, the parcel of effects, the photo of a grave with palm leaves'.

"They were real. It was my brother and he wouldn't be coming home. So VJ-Day was a day of great joy and sorrow for me. Also — I had scarlet fever."

Mrs Howitt now lives in Mt Eden, Auckland.

Jack Baker, of Epsom, Auckland, was an Ordinary Seaman in London and recalls the city being "absolutely mad". An extract from a letter he sent home dated August 19, 1945, reads: "Three of us pinched a red traffic lamp and marched across Piccadilly Square down through Leicester Square and around to Buckingham Palace.

"On VJ night I went to a little bar in The Strand and after a few drinks a New Zealand flying officer I was with said 'Is your dad Frank Baker at The Farmers?' I nearly died. He used to work at the Farmers branch office, Whatnall was his name."

For 50 years Jack Baker never gave this letter a thought until a few months ago when he was going through all the letters his mother had kept.

"Only two Whatnalls in the book so I gave it a go — and there a few seconds later he was on the phone, John Whatnall, fit and well, the ex-flying officer who drank with a 20-year-old ordinary seaman on VJ night in London 50 years ago. Over he came from the Shore for an unexpected and dramatic meeting."

Eileen O'Gorman (now Eileen Lynch, of Avalon, Wellington) worked in the State Advances office on Wellington's Lambton Quay with her friend Elsa Veale.

"On hearing the wonderful news we grabbed our belongings and raced out on to the street. Excited throngs of people kissed and hugged complete strangers. Nothing mattered on this momentous ococasion: this was history!

"People blew tin whistles and threw confetti, sang and danced in a wild exuberant fashion. It was madness of the nicest possible fashion. We wound our way up to St Mary of the Angels in Boulcott St, by the St George Hotel. We entered the church and each lit a candle to pray. The church was empty, a complete contrast to the pandemonium outside. As we put our threepences in the special box for the purchase of the candles a man with a large camera came in through a side door. He asked could he take a photo for his paper.

"We obliged and knelt. I was vainly flattered. Just couldn't wait to see our saintly selves in his paper. The photo never appeared: I've often wondered why as Elsa was so pretty."

Reg Mills vividly remembers August 15 as it was his 17th birthday. The period after 10.30am recess at Mt Albert Grammar was interrupted by "an unusually prolonged bell summonsing everyone to the school hall.

"The hush as Freddy Gamble, a very popular headmaster, entered the hall moving at an unfamiliar faster gait, grinning wildly for him, wide open eyes, moving his head, neck and gown from side to side over-vigorously as he increased his pace to the raised stage.

"He grappled with the microphone — there was a deathly hush, you could have heard a pin drop. He announced 'The war is over, you can all go . . .'

"No one heard the finishing statement. The hall erupted. Everyone, including staff, appeared to spontaneously jump in the air shouting with upraised arms, and then the massed exodus.

"We burst out of the hall past the trenches we had dug in 1942 and filled in 1944, out of the gates to home."

Reg Mills, now 67 and living on the Hibiscus Coast, ended up in Queen St that day. "It was an unforgettable experience. Pubs were open, overflowing into the streets with people drinking, revelling, frolicking. If there was drunkeness it was sunk with the general spontaneous joyousness experienced by all.

"Kissing and hugging from and to complete strangers was the norm. Dancing in circles, massed singing in groups. Cheer leaders springing up ad lib.

"Years later as a primary school principal I would regularly raise the flag on August 15, for four reasons, I would explain to the pupils. Firstly, it ended the worst of all wars. Secondly, Princess Anne's birthday. Thirdly, the Panama Canal was opened in 1913, and fourthly it was my birthday. Pupils could judge the most relevant."

Charles Needham, of Seatoun, Wellington, was a POW in Narumi camp, near Nagoya, Japan, on VJ-Day.

"We were confined to our barracks and we noticed that the camp staff assembled in the camp office. We were to find out that they were listening to the Emperor on the radio announcing the surrender.

"Next thing the Japanese interpreter came in to the barrack room with his usual preamble 'Attention all the boys', followed by the announcement that the war was over.

"He must have expected loud cheers and was nonplussed when the only reaction from one of us was 'About bloody time too'.

"Like the others, I just lay back on my bed space and let it sink in. It was like a reprieve from a death sentence. We knew that there was bloody fighting in Okinawa and thought that our chances of survival were very slim if the Americans had to attack Japan with land forces.

"Only later we heard about the atom bomb and were glad that it had been dropped."

On yer bike, it's over

By BOB TIZARD

GET UP, Tiz, or the war will finish without you! I crashed to the floor of our Nissen hut, in a pine plantation near the Silverstone airfield which is now home to Britain's Grand Prix racing circuit.

Then, it was a typical RAF wartime field with facilities widely dispersed and bicycles a normal transport form.

The noise built outside. The general rush was to the main airfield — where a fair crowd was visible near the admin area. In the middle of it, a near berserk wing commander was spraying tracers generally skyward; his gun jammed before any post-war casualties resulted, and the gunner collapsed in ruins. Impromptu musical efforts petered out, as none of the performers had talents that would stand to them in civvy street.

We knew that camp supplies had been eroded almost to vanishing point as an outcome of the rumours and their celebration; the two village pubs seemed a long way off.

Next morning, we were supposed to parade after breakfast but many had already scarpered to places unnamed. The gist of our CO's message was simple: Japan had surrendered; he didn't want to see us for three days, but there would be no travel warrants.

After brief discussion, five Enzedders took to their bikes in number one blues and a small kitbag with a change of essentials. Rumour now had it there would be no local trains so we set off about 10 in the general direction of Oxford on the nearest main line to London.

I still remember a sign pointing to Banbury Cross and thinking of the nursery rhyme as my 30 shilling steed bore me along. The bike was still in working order when I discarded it with the other war surplus outside the railway station.

A bit dishevelled, we did get to London, and the tubes were still working well. We did get to the NZ Forces Club, the Fern Leaf Club and various pubs, clubs and streets along the way. Everyone was welcome everywhere if they could push in. The only arrest I can remember was a New Zealand sailor, drunk in charge of a wheelbarrow. The fruit hawker who owned it couldn't see the funny side — fruit like peaches was very high-priced.

I was 21 and alive. Life was noise and movement. We were very much alive. Serious discussion like the morality of using atom bombs had no place. That was for oldies or stay-at-homes, later — much later.

WORLD WAR II ANNIVERSARY TRIBUTE

Bottles, blokes and bombs

By TERRY McLEAN

THERE are times and places for the drinking of wine — a pursuit which, in the right company and with the right bottle, gives me great pleasure.

These times do not include the hour of 5am or, as we called it in those days, 0500.

Nor do the places include a tent and a camp-stretcher.

But as I and a brother soldier occupying the other stretcher slept peacefully through the beautiful hours of dawn on an August morning somewhere in Italy 50 years ago, our sleep was sundered.

A team of rude and licentious soldiery from the 22nd Infantry Battalion, 2nd New Zealand Division — my outfit — burst and bowled their way into the tent.

"She's right, boys," they shouted, not all in unison. "The war is over. The Nips have tossed in the sponge."

Both of us sat up. "Say again?", we said.

"Swallow this, boss," a bloke said. He handed me a large bottle of vermouth or, as we were accustomed to calling it, vino. "The Yanks dropped one atom bomb the other day, now they've dropped a second on a place called Nagasaki. Millions of casualties. The Japs want no more."

By this time, I was getting into the vino. Not with earnest enthusiasm. Red or white, the Eyetie version of wine lacked, I reckoned then, true quality. But whether my palate felt it was being offended or no made no difference. By this time, there could have been a dozen coves in the tent. They were passing rapidly into insobriety. Soon they would be, as the Italians say it, "ubriago" — pie-eyed.

Frankly, I don't remember much of the rest of the day. We drank and had food; we drank more; we slept; we drank.

I must have been about the longest serving 22 man in the battalion when we trekked, months and months later, to Japan. Riding to our village, we stopped for a time at Hiroshima.

Apart from an odd, bare, concrete wall, the city was grey ash.

At 0500 on VJ Day, we might not have got stuck into the vino quite so eagerly and earnestly if we had known what an atom bomb had done to a city.

PARADE . . . Palmerston North people greet floats to mark the end of the war

Rooster dinner, but nothing to crow about

By JOAN BUTLAND

AS A member of the Women's Land Service, I remember VJ Day very well. I was working on a dairy farm near Whangarei at that time and August was a busy month with half the herd in and more calving each day.

We could not leave work to celebrate but the party line was busy as local folk rang to rejoice with friends and family. The farmer's wife cooked us a celebration dinner. Guess who killed and dressed a rooster as part of the meal?

The announcement by Britain's Prime Minister Mr Attlee had been expected after the Allies' decision to use the atom bomb against Japan. Few of us realised the terrible results at the time. Anything to end the war seemed justified after Japan's attack on Pearl Harbour.

We were well aware that Japan would take over this country if we lost the war. In Northland, the Home Guard and county workers had placed road blocks of huge logs. These were balanced above cuttings where the road had a steep hill above and a deep drop below. Thankfully, we never found out what use they might have been in delaying an enemy advance.

VJ Day let us look forward to our troops returning and no more long casualty lists in the newspapers. Sadly, it also meant further grief to many families facing the thought of the men who would never return.

Looking back, few of us realised how long it would take to sort out the aftermath of the war worldwide, and that we would never get back to what we thought of as normal.

If you were a New Zealander during World War I or World War II...

... then you'll probably remember Mobil by other names, like these —

1916-18 — the Standard Vacuum Oil Company (now Mobil) filled virtually all New Zealand's local petroleum needs when other supplies were diverted to the war theatre.

By 1939, Vacuum Oil brands such as Laurel and Plume had become household names. So too had Mobil. Vacuum Oil supported those in military training prior to World War II, and 251 of its employees fought overseas. Vacuum Oil was already blending oils in New Zealand, and the company commissioned a grease-making plant during World War II to secure vital domestic supplies. At the same time overseas, Socony-Mobil was at the forefront in developing 100 octane fuel, synthetic rubber, quenching oils for steel plate manufacture, and paratene for keeping oils liquid at low temperatures.

Fifty years on, Mobil is commemorating its part in New Zealand's war effort by supporting VJ Day celebrations.
