Treacherous Breezes Prevent The Wearing Of Spring Ensembles

Spring weather is indeed fickle, and it was unkind yesterday for the first day of the Havelock Bay Jockey Club's spring racing meeting.

All the women had planned to try their new and smart ensembles, but had to be content with their old because a cool and blustering wind made it impossible to wear frocks and light blouses. For the women who were well timed hats reflected their decision when they saw the wind while on track or multi-colours on navy—all most attractive.

Among these present were:

Miss A. L. Thompson, recognized for her long and elegant hair, wearing a blue and white striped dress, with a large hat and a long veil.

Miss F. H. Levey, wearing a white dress with a large hat and a long veil, was seen with a long veil and a large hat.

Miss M. E. Grant, dressed in a London lace flowered gown with a large hat and a long veil, was seen with a long veil and a large hat.

Miss A. W. M. Ryan, wearing a white dress with a large hat and a long veil, was seen with a long veil and a large hat.

How to Learn Lines

A stranger to a sound stage is usually confronted with two mistakes that the actors are guilty of.

His first mistake is to read his lines in a monotone. He reads them as if they were a list of names to be called out.

Several correct methods were shown during the session. The first was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice.

Another method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the pitch and inflection.

A third method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the rhythm and tempo.

A fourth method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the emphasis and stress.

A fifth method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the volume and intensity.

A sixth method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the tone and color.

A seventh method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the texture and quality.

An eighth method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the shape and contour.

A ninth method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the movement and gesture.

A tenth method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the expression and feeling.

A eleventh method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the attitude and mood.

A twelfth method was to read the lines in a normal tone of voice, but to vary the style and manner.

Not so long ago George Formby was just about settled down to the satisfaction of considerable stars that average theatrical fame as a shining light of the variety field, with his support given in Lancashire.

Today he brags in the front of international fame, rating with George Formby as the highest of British screen stars. His latest film, "IT'S THE A.I.P.," promising to skyrocket him to greater heights than ever.
