LORD STRATBOLGH'S CRITICAL VISIT BY MR CHAMBERLAIN

CANDID COMMENT GIVEN TO THE "DAILY MAIL" "BLACKMAIL BY ITALY AND GERMANY"

Chamberlain was rather like the captain of a ship who had foisted this vessel on a port and received great credit for getting it off again in the crisis which at Munich...

"I am surprised that New Zealand should be so far from London... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right..."

"I had my eye... Chamberlain would still be in London... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right..."

"I would not give anything like the... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right..."

"I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right..."

"I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right..."

"I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right..."

"I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right... I think that you are quite in the right..."

THE CREW OF THE SHIP... The photograph, which was taken a few minutes before the ship departed, gives a good impression of the vessel of the ship.

When you see PERSIL WHITES you'll wonder why you were satisfied with anything else

You may be getting your washing as white as any woman could—judging by ordinary standards. But if you could not see those ordinary-washed whites against a Persil wash, you'd wonder how you could ever have been satisfied with anything so drab. Persil on its own is the standard of whiteness in washing. That's because Persil's acids are oxygen-charged to do such stains and ingrained grime. Persil washes perfectly clean and so, of course, perfectly white.

Use Persil for the whole family wash—no other soap or stain remover.
