STIRRING DEFENCE OF DEMOCRACY

Superiority Against Other Forms of Government

ROOSEVELT SPEAKS

United Press Association-Copyright. (Received March 5, 8.45 p.m.)

President Roosevelt, addressing Congress on the 150th anniversary of the founding of the L'nited States, bluntly stated the growth of democracy, prizing its advantages over other forms of government.

President Roosevelt, referring to free choice of government, said, "That, after all, is the great difference between what we know as a democracy and those other forms of government, which, though they seem now to us, are essentially evil, for they revert to those systems of concentrated and unaccountable power against which the representative democracy of democracy was successfully launched several centuries ago."
