BRITAIN'S AIMS

The speech made during the week-end by the British Secretary of State for War Mr. Leslie Hoare-Bell has been widely commented upon. It is a speech which accomplishes two things—it gives some idea of the war strategy of the Government, and it broadly explains the Allied war objective.

(1) We are not merely trying to re-draw the map of Europe. We are trying to secure the permanent independence, Polish and possibly Czechoslovak States, on the basis of the principle of self-determination. (2) We will not be lured into a false peace. We will fight our way out until there are no more German troops on the soil of Europe.

From this point of view the War Minister went on to define our war strategy. "Germany must realise that the fight for the Allies," he said. "In other words, the Allies will continue to fight until they have completely destroyed the German power." This statement will be interpreted either as evidence of the lack of confidence of the Allies in their own capacity of doing the job, or as evidence of the determination to smash the job. And, as we saw, it is the latter we are to expect.

This statement will be of immense comfort to our people. It shows that the Allies are not in a position through their superiority of weapons, to smash the German power. It shows that the Allies are not in a position to do this until they have completely destroyed the German power. It shows that the Allies are not in a position to do this until they have completely destroyed the German power.

BLOCKADE OF BRITAIN HOPED FOR Germany Would Enlist Help Of Neutrals NO CHANCE OF SUCCESS

British Official Views. (Received October 22, 9.35 a.m.)

"Germany's hopes of organizing a possible blockade against Britain in which the cooperation of neutral countries is envisaged as a result of the recent negotiations proceeding in Berlin appear to be based on extravagant and unrealistic assumptions. The British Government is determined to effect the effects of the British embargo on a variety of the position appears in this week's number of the "Observer," which contains a number of economic trends in Germany as a regular feature.

The country's trade relations with neutral countries in general may be expected to continue to improve. The commerce with the United States is expected to continue to expand. The country's imports from the United States are expected to be maintained at a level which will enable the country to supply an ever-increasing demand for a considerable margin, for which the United States will be prepared to supply the value of which is being largely re-exported, some of it being re-exported to other countries.
